Councillors uninformed

Council staff have failed in an attempt to force a Byron Bay residents group to supply membership and donor names and addresses through the courts - all without informing councillors.

It comes as Council were also unsuccessful in court on October 31 in recovering part of their $453,129.29 in legal costs from the Butler Street Community Network, who challenged Council's bypass plans.

The Echo understands general manager Ken Gainger was delegated authority by councillors to defend the court case brought by residents.

As to the status of the overblown bypass budget, The Echo is yet to receive a reply from staff.

Both mayor Simon Richardson (Greens) and Cr Paul Spooner (Labor) confirmed with The Echo that they were not informed of staff's request to the courts for the personal information of the residents' group.

Cr Richardson said he would be 'happy to follow it up.'

'Any of Council's funds spent on defending its decisions, even when successful, or spent following up in seeking costs to be paid, is a regrettable use of funds.

'Heaven knows, we could spend legal expenses in a myriad of better ways; however, if Council rolls over, over time others launch legal action [and] we would also be in a perilous position when trying to make decisions on behalf of the whole community.'

Meanwhile, Cr Spooner added he 'doesn't support vexatious court cases against community members.'

As for the current status of the bypass, he said costings have not shifted since $20m was previously announced.

He said, 'We are still $6m short; there has been no movement on this from the state government that I know of.

Initially shocked

Butler Street Community Network president Paul Jones told The Echo, 'We were initially shocked by the claim for costs sought by Council given their own error had caused the issue.'

'But the breadth of further information Council was demanding was simply outrageous.

'Our community organisation is a not-for-profit association of private individuals. Council was launching a fishing expedition obviously intended to garner information in a way that was highly intimidating and suspicious.

'The Network negotiated with Council over several weeks to seek an out of court settlement.

'The Network refused to reveal its private affairs, however, an offer of $4,000 in good faith was made to the Council to settle the matter.

'The Council was also informed that the Network had no assets, so even if the Council did get a favourable order, the Network would dissolve. But Council refused the offer and chose, instead, to waste more ratepayers' money on a misguided effort to bully the Network and other community associations.

'Byron Shire Council continued to pursue our association,' said Jones. 'Literally tearing up ratepayers' money with no hope of recovery in an exercise to discourage and destroy the community's voice.

'We are now demanding no less than the resignation of the general manager (GM) Ken Gainger.'

Transport hub location perplexity

Confusion and uncertainty still surrounds the location of a proposed transit hub for Byron Bay.

While no costings have been provided, a Transport for NSW spokesperson told The Echo, 'Transport for NSW has been working with Byron Shire Council on developing a new bus interchange since 2015.'

'A number of sites were investigated by Transport for NSW as part of initial concept plans for the new bus interchange. Butler Street Reserve was a site chosen by Byron Shire Council as the most suitable Bay Masterplan.'

Not consulted

Yet Chris Hanley from the masterplan leadership group told The Echo, 'The leadership group and the community members of the master plan group were not consulted on this decision. We had no input into the design or location. This decision was made by Council staff who did not consult with us.'

The issue again highlights tension between staff and councillors, where location as it fits within the Byron senior staff have taken an active role in policy decisions instead of implementing Council policy.

Mayor Simon Richardson (Greens) told The Echo that the transit hub location was not set in stone.

"The use of the term "masterplan" is regrettable in this instance and I will be instructing staff to cease using it to explain every action or decision within Byron Bay.

'The only connection to the masterplan is that the masterplan illustrated the benefits and desirability of

Airbnb listings up nearly 80 per cent

According to www.insideairbnb.com, there has been a 79.6 per cent increase in Airbnb listings for Byron Shire in the last 18 months.

From April 2, 2016 to October 21, 2017, listings have increased from 1,483 to 2,665. Listings on Airbnb are tracked by www.insideairbnb.com, which includes an interactive map displaying what Airbnb properties are available.

Entire houses

The majority of short-term Airbnb holiday lettings appear to be entire houses and apartments, with whole dwellings increasing from 62.4 per cent to 75.9 per cent of total listings, according to the website.

Victim of Holiday Letting (VOHL)'s David Wallace told The Echo, 'Airbnb has now overtaken Stayz as the major online disruptor.

'Some holiday lets don't advertise on Airbnb.

'VOHL estimates that there is now 3,000 holiday lets in the Shire.

Additionally councillors were told at Thursday's meeting that staff have prepared a holiday letting case for prosecution, which they intend to take to the Land and Environment Court. Details are confidential at this stage.

Train hits track, powered by solar

Two restored 1949 rail motor heritage carriages were delivered to Byron Bay on Friday, marking the final stages of a six year project to run a train along 3km of track from Belongil to the CBD.

Touted as the 'world's first solar train, the project is headed by not-for-profit Byron Bay Railroad Company, an offshoot of the Elements of Byron resort.

According to BBRC, 'One of the two diesel engines has been removed and the other remains on board for weight and balance and also to provide an emergency back up in case of electrical fault. The remaining diesel engine is not required for normal operation, even in cases of prolonged lack of sunshine.'

The cost will be $3 for adults with some concessions provided for children.

Project manager Jeremy Holmes said his team were looking forward to running the passenger service and sharing the experience with residents and visitors soon.

100 passengers

The train, which has been fully refurbished in its heritage colours, seats 100 passengers with additional room for standing passengers and luggage including prams and bicycles.

Holmes says, 'While there are some trains throughout the world with technology that allows them to run parts of the train like lights and air conditioning on solar power, this is the first real train to run fully on power from the sun.'

Byron Bay Railroad Company says it is hopeful that passenger services will commence before Christmas. In the meantime, they say they will be training the nineteen new local staff, undertaking test runs and commissioning the new solar equipment. For more information visit www.byronbaytrain.com.au.

Neighbour's impacts from holiday letting unsupported by Council

A Byron Bay resident has told The Echo that Council staff have been unable to act on her complaints about her neighbours' Airbnb activities, which she says are so intrusive she has had to buy earplugs.

'I'm 71 years old and have been here 21 years,' she told The Echo.

'Over those years, I have done thousands of hours of community work, yet Council are unable to help me by enforcing compliance against this activity.

'I'm suffering from stress and sleep deprivation because of this,' she said.

After she asked Council to intervene, she says Council compliance inspected the neighbour's property.

'I just got a letter from Council which said there are "no compliance issues identified at this moment".

The issue arose after her neighbours renovated their house. 'They moved the entrance of their one bedroom Airbnb premises to be under my bedroom window.'

She says no DA was required to move the doorway entrance to the Airbnb-let premises.

'Guests used to go through another entrance,' she said, 'which was closer to the neighbour's own entrance.

'They moved the problem, without asking me.'

The Council compliance officer could only suggest earplugs and mediation.

'I'm not interested in mediation as I believe these people won't change,' she said. 'Apparently people coming up a driveway doesn't constitute a noise complaint.

'Whatever was said to the compliance officer, he argued it was within their legal rights. What about my rights?'

The woman says she has also documented to staff 74 times she has been woken up by late night visitors.

Once friendly

'We were very friendly at one time, she says of her neighbours, adding they are a couple in the mid-50s who moved from Sydney two years ago.

'Originally the woman wanted to start a yoga class in the garage, but that never happened; instead they are making heaps of money from Airbnb.

'It's booked consistently,' she says. 'They don't even provide breakfast or parking, so it's not really a proper Airbnb. There is a sense of entitlement with people like this

- people are moving here and thinking they can do whatever they want.

'After a few drinks, visitors come back up the driveway. Even though it wakes me up, I am told it's not my problem. I bought a home in Byron Bay because I wanted to hear the ocean, but instead I have to wear earplugs?

She added that around 16 years ago, she was part of a community group that called upon Council to act on holiday letting.

'We handed a 6,000 signiture petition to Council yet there's not been much enforcement of this activity.'

'I just want the door to be restored to the original entrance,' she said.

'While I'm not against Airbnb altogether, I don't accept Byron is just a holiday town and that we just have to put up with it.'

Staff reply

In reply, Council's legal services co-ordinator Ralph James confirmed Byron Shire Council received a complaint from a Byron Bay resident in October who said the noise from a bed and breakfast operating next door to her property was disturbing her.

James told The Echo,

'Staff inspected the property, which is in a low-density residential zone, and found the door to the bed and breakfast was near the window of the person who had made the noise complaint.

'A one-bedroom bed and breakfast accommodation in this area is permissible and does not require development consent and according to planning law, the bed and breakfast is legally allowed to operate.

'Council understands the difficulty some people face when living in areas where guest accommodation is allowed, he said.

Perceptions

'If the noise is determined to be "offensive," Council can serve prevention notices requiring the control of the offensive noise.

'People do, however, have different perceptions about the definition of "offensive"so generally this type of noise is defined as continuous and loud, for example a barking dog, noisy appliances or regular parties.

'If this is the case then people can seek a noise abatement order, James said.

Transport hub location perplexity

locating the bus interchange on the other side of the tracks from town, hence moving bus movements out of the town centre. The connection to Butler Street reserve was not in the masterplan.

Pushy staff

Meanwhile, a push by Council staff to force councillors to decide on plans for a transport hub on Butler Street in only a few days has been deferred until a meeting on Thursday.

According to a November 1 staff memo, infrastructure services director Phil Holloway told councillors, 'I apologise for the late notice, but owing to the requirement to respond to Sydney Trains by this Friday, I would greatly appreciate your feedback at the close of the extra ordinary meeting tomorrow [Thursday].

Six options were provided to councillors, with Sydney Trains expressing a preference for Option 1a. Alternative suggestions were also welcome, said Holloway.

Option 1a depicts buses running past Sommerset Street and entering a station located in the northern end of Butler Reserve. Buses would continue back onto Butler Street, creating a road surrounding the Reserve.

Cr Paul Spooner told The Echo that staff's request to make a major infrastructure decision within a couple of days 'was bullshit,' and that the Butler Street interchange plans were not a 'done deal.'

'Whatever the proposal is, the government needs to fit in with the community's plans,' he said. 'The masterplan leadership group should be included. I'm not against a bus station, but these decisions need to be in conjunction with others.

'Personally, I think we

Conceptual plans of a Butler Street interchange includes a cafe and a plaza. Councillors will meet Thursday to thrash out how to move forward. Image Byron Bay Bus Interchange memo should be looking at options such as the Cavanbah Centre on Ewingsdale Rd. It could be better planning in the long term.

Cr Spooner continued, 'The issue of staff pushing councillors on decisions was highlighted at Thursday's council meeting, where staff were asking us to make a decision on applying for funding for a pool at the Cavanbah Centre. The issue of any future pool needs to be communicated to the masterplan group and community at large. There should be a correct process.

Foisted by staff

Local state MP for Ballina, Tamara Smith told The Echo, 'I thought the state government had foisted this project on us and were dictating the location but it has become clear that it's the other way around!'

'It seems that in 2015, while the mayor with vision and fortitude was honing the best processes of community consultation we have ever seen in the establishment of the Byron masterplan committee, Council staff asked the government to build a transport hub to be located on Butler Street only; there were no other suggested location options.

'It is great that the state government is prepared to build a bus interchange, although it's not a selfless act as it will benefit Transport for NSW coach services and bring in tourism dollars.

'We have had a volunteer masterplan committee selflessly giving up thousands of human hours over the past four years to consult the community on the changes to the town, but they have never been presented with this significant expansion of the CBD and the removal of the Byron and Farmers Markets.

'As was suggested to me recently, surely with the kinds of serious communication breakdowns between community and council staff and councillors over a range of really important changes to our beloved town, a full-time council officer is required to oversee the implementation of the community-driven Byron Bay masterplan.

'For the GM to say in a recent memo to councillors that removing the markets and replacing them with a bus interchange is in keeping with the objectives of the masterplan shows a distinct lack of respect for the process.

'There are 20 or so community representives on the masterplan committee - who have never been apprised of the Butler Street reserve plans.

'Another great suggestion that I heard recently from someone on the committee is rather than spending $20 to $40million on the Butler Street bypass, why don't we embrace another brilliant vision of our mayor and create the best park and ride system in the world? That kind of money would deliver it.

Peak traffic levels

'I was also advised last week by the RMS that Byron Bay's traffic levels pegged for 2025 have now been reached, and that the bypass in Butler Street will have no impact on reducing car movements in town.'

Comment was also sought from Ben Franklin MLC (Nationals), but he referred The Echo's questions instead to Transport for NSW.

The Transport for NSW spokesperson also added that both council and Transport for NSW agreed that 'Council would undertake community consultation of the project including working with market holders to find a new venue during construction.'

Laid back or laid off? A look at underemployment

Paul Bibby

When Cris quit her well-paying film and television industry job to move to the Shire in the early 2000s, she knew finding regular work would be a challenge.

But the talented young woman didn't expect that, more than a decade on, she'd be facing the prospect of having to leave town due to a lack of consistent work.

For years, Cris rode the seasonal roller coaster of Byron's tourist-driven job market - working over summer, but struggling to survive for the rest of the year.

Now she's contemplating greener employment pastures.

'I love living here – this is my home,' she says.

'But if I can't generate the income to pay the rent then it's a no brainer.'

Familiar tale

Cris's story is all too familiar for many in the Shire.

Thousands of locals are engaged in a nearly constant battle to generate enough regular income in a job market which is dominated by parttime jobs in tourism, hospitality and retail.

New figures from the Australian Bureau of Statistics show that Byron Shire has the lowest proportion of people working full-time of any local government area in NSW.

Just 42 per cent of working locals are hitting the 38-hour mark, well below the state average of 59.2 per cent.

At the same time, we have one of the highest rates of part-time work in the state, with 45 per cent of employed people in this category.

And more than a third of these part-timers are working just 15 hours a week or less barely enough to pay the rent given the region's ongoing affordability crisis.

A major Sydney newspaper recently declared that the small number of Byron residents working 40 hours or more each week was simply a reflection of our 'laid back attitude' to work.

And it's true that there has long been a pilgrimage of people moving here with the intention to 'work less and surf more'.

Tony Davies, the chief executive of local community services organisation, Social Futures, believes the figures include a significant number of these 'sea and tree changers'.

'You've got people selling their house in Sydney for $2m and buying a house in Mullumbimby for $800,000 and living on the leftovers supplemented by a small amount of work,' Mr Davies says.

'There's also an older demographic in parts of the Byron Shire has one of the highest rates of part-time work in the state. Image www.masemp.com shire – people who are retired or semi-retired.

But as Mr Davies acknowledges, it's not all pina coladas and organic bananas.

Working poor

A significant proportion of Shire residents are struggling to get enough regular work to consistently pay the rent and keep food on the table.

The manager of the Mullumbimby & District Neighbourhood Centre, Julie Williams says many of the people making use of the centre's emergency relief programs are employed part-time.

'There is an assumption that people who access emergency relief are all unemployed,' Ms Williams says.

'But a very large percentage of the people seeking assistance are working between 12 and 20 hours a week.'

The median weekly income in the Shire for families and individuals is about 30 per cent below that for the rest of NSW, according to the ABS figures.

One of the things that concerns me is the perception that Byron is an affluent community, when there are really significant, high levels of disadvantage,' Ms Williams says.

'It cuts across all demographics – it's not just young men or older women or single mothers. And it's not just the unemployed.'

New jobs needed

Jane Laverty, the head of the local chapter of the NSW Business Chamber says underemployment is a 'massive issue' in the Shire and the northern rivers more generally.

She believes the answer is more 'export jobs'.

'We need businesses to set up here and produce products which they then export out of the local area,' she says.

'It means you've got more consistent demand for employment and there's money flowing consistently into the local economy.'

She says that to encourage this type of investment, the region needs to develop its 'third world infrastructure' and improve training opportunities.

Chef shortages

Yet the Shire is definitely not suffering from a shortage of people with qualifications.

The ABS figures show that nearly a quarter of all locals over the age of 15 have at least a Bachelor degree, and a further 26 per cent of locals have some other tertiary qualification.

Yet, despite the qualified people who need work, some employers are struggling to find the staff they need.

The most glaring example is the current shortage of experienced, qualified chefs.

Ingrid Johansen, the business relationships manager at local recruitment company ETC, says local employers are struggling to find and retain chefs.

'I think people going into the industry need to have some skills to survive and need to know before they start that they will be required to work weekends and split shifts. It's not going to be like Master Chef, Ms Johansen says.

However, Mr Davies says there are a few flickers of light on the horizon.

'Thanks to the National Disability Insurance Scheme, disability services is becoming a major employer, he says.

'Regional NSW alone will need 20,000 new workers under the scheme, he said.

A growing number of locals are also bypassing the limitations of Byron's job market by selling their products and peddling their skills

'The people of this region are creative and resourceful and they're finding innovative ways of making a living, especially as connectivity [via the internet] increases, Mr Davies says.

Cris is among those who want to jump off the seasonal jobs merry-go-round by starting her own business.

'I have always put my heart and soul into my work and would definitely do so if I was running my own business,' she says. 'It would be great to earn enough so that I can stay here and maybe even start putting a little bit away.'

Refugees must have access to essential services: Labor

With around 600 asylum seekers barricaded inside the now closed Manus Island detention centre, there appears no solution in sight to the standoff.

Fairfax reports that despite running out of food, water and medication, the asylum seekers are 'adamant it's safer to remain than risk being attacked by locals at the new accommodation facilities on the island.

The Echo asked local federal MP Justine Elliot (Labor) what her party's position was on the issue; she referred to a statement by shadow minister for Immigration and Border Protection, Shayne Neumann.

He said, 'Manus Island and Nauru were set up as regional transit processing facilities but have become places of indefinite detention because of the failure of PM Malcolm Turnbull to negotiate other third country resettlement options.'

'Turnbull's failure to answer basic questions about arrangements in PNG is only fuelling refugees' uncertainty about moving to new accommodation. It is incumbent on Turnbull to ensure refugees have access to essential services – including security, health and welfare services. Turnbull needs to get on with his job and immediately secure other third country resettlement options for eligible refugees.'

Turnbull has rejected an offer from the New Zealand government to take 150 of the 600 people.

The awesome Del sets sights on Adelaide

Aslan Shand

When Main Arm Road was still a dirt road, Del Youngberry first came to live in the area with her husband and she has been an active part of the community ever since.

While she is known by many for her tireless work at the Seventh-Day Adventist op-shop in Mullumbimby, Del will soon spread her wings to fly off to Adelaide to be closer to her daughter and grandchildren.

Del has worked for around 15 years at the op-shop and pointed out what an important part of the community op-shops are.

'We donate the profits to the Westpac helicopter service, both the Main Arm and Mullumbimby Fire brigades, the Women's refuge in Ballina, the Brunswick Surf Lifesaving Club and Brunswick Rescue as well as the Mullumbimby Hospital Auxiliary, Amitayus Home Respite Service and the animal rescue,' said Del proudly.

'I wanted to do this because I believe it is God's work and I am doing something that is part of the community.'

Del Youngberry and op-shop manager Faye King. Photo Jeff Dawson

The SDA op-shop recently celebrated its 20 year anniversary.

It provides a range of services to the community such as food parcels and other goods for people in need.

'Del has been my righthand person,' said op-shop manager Faye King.

'She is talented at recovering furniture and making cushions – she is kind of irreplaceable.'

Vollies needed

The op-shop recently trialed a successful furniture store in the old SDA primary school on Main Arm Road and are planning to open up the furniture store again at their current locations.

'We'd love to have more volunteers,' added pastor Cranville Tooley.

'But it takes initiative and dedication,' pointed out Del.

If you would like to volunteer at the op-shop then give them a call on 6684 4141, there is plenty of sorting to do and people needed to help. Del is planning to get back into her crafts when she has set herself up in Adelaide.

Vale Peter 'Bullfrog' McKaskill

Joanne Palmer

Known to many as Bullfrog and to others as Froggy, Peter McKaskill was a unique man and known by a diverse range of people.

As a legendary Byron Bay singer, Peter rocked the Bay since the early 80s with his passion and love of music.

With local band Bypass, Peter and band members would rock-out at The Arts Factory and The Rails Friendly Bar, always entertaining a range of all generations with their mix of music.

For many years Bullfrog was involved with the organising of our local Bluesfest and of course his band Bypass would be part of the action.

Bullfrog was a colourful character on stage with his bright pants, colourful shirts, range of hats and even his favourite yellow Buddha robe, outfits that only a man with his character could pull off.

Music was a big part of his heart and soul and on stage that shone through. It didn't worry him that he didn't make many dollars, his greatest payment of all was to give joy and happiness to others and to put smiles on people's faces.

Peter also established Juke Box Joy, where he and a mate would visit the aged care homes singing golden oldies like Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra even giving the elderly special Christmas shows.

There was so much more to Peter than any one person could know. He supported Aboriginal culture and the protection of sacred sites. He felt very strongly about the environment and was involved in starting the Greenpeace movement.

Peter was one of the first organic food growers in this area, trying to give others the realisation of the potential and beauty the land has to offer.

Of great importance was Peter's belief in the equality of all living species on Earth. He made it his mission to try and make humans aware that humans are only the carers of this land. All living species play a significant role in the survival of this world and Peter's dream was for a world of peace and togetherness with all living species. Let's stop our world being consumed by greed, violence and corruption. Especially for the sake of our younger generations.

Peter had his ups and downs. He had struggles through his life, suffering his own demons from bi-polar and at times severe depression. To all who knew him well, Bullfrog-Froggy Peter was a kind, caring and loving man.

He gave so much of himself to others and our community.

M'bah drug dog blitz results in cautions

The neverending war on a plant with medicinal properties resulted in a caution for a 'number of persons' in Murwillumbah's CBD on November 1.

Police report that 'small amounts of cannabis' were located around the town, and highlighted one instance where a sniffer dog 'indicated the presence of a prohibited drug in the free air space surrounding a 31-year-old old male.' Police say they then searched the man's backpack and located a bag containing cannabis leaf. 'The male was not responsive initially, but suggested there could possibly be cannabis in his bag as he takes it medicinally. The male was cautioned and asked questions about the substance where he made full and frank admissions about the drug being cannabis for personal use. The drug was seized and an application for the drug to be destroyed will be made.'

NSW Greens David Shoebridge MLC has recently claimed that these police operations cost taxpayers $2,000 per dog, per hour.

Flu cases decreasing: health dept

The number of positive influenza cases being reported at The Tweed Hospital is decreasing as the peak influenza period is coming to an end.

Chief Executive, Northern NSW Local Health District (NNSWLHD) Wayne Jones told The Echo that interim data for the month of October indicates a significant drop in the number of positive influenza cases reported for The Tweed Hospital, with 20 cases being confirmed so far, down from 74 in September and 184 in August.

'The high number of positive influenza cases in 2017 compared to previous years may be partly attributable to the roll-out of new rapid testing machines across NSW, one of which is in use at The Tweed Hospital Pathology North.'

'This machine detects a positive Influenza A or B virus in two hours, enabling doctors to make quicker diagnoses which can result in more effective treatment for patients.'

Jones added vaccination is the best protection against flu.

Two more themed seats, as part of the trail of seats along Tweed Street, will be officially launched on Thursday November 9 by federal member for Richmond, Justine Elliott (Labor).

The construction of the youth seat at the skatepark and the Fishing Boat Seat at the boat harbour were funded from a small grant from the federal government's stronger community program, Byron Shire Council, the Brunswick Fish Co and the Brunswick Heads Chamber of Commerce.

Spokesperson for the Tweed Street Taskforce Kim Rosen said, 'The seats were lovingly created as a collaborative community effort, with many people contributing their time and expertise over the last two years and the results are truly amazing.

'The seats, which are more like art installations, brought many sections of our community together and are delightful expressions of our youth and fishing history and culture,' she says.

Students involved

Students from Brunswick Heads Public School were guided by local artist Kerry Stanton and helped with one seat's design and construction using a simple earth bag technique. Kim said, 'It was terrific to see how much fun the students had shovelling and filling the sausage-like bags with sand and cement and then tamping them down to create the unique curved seat.'

The children's hand painted tiles decorate parts of the seat and add a touch of colour and fun. A short YouTube video showing their involvement and comments about life in our town was created by the students as part of the school's media program.

In contrast, the fish seat is of timber construction and looks quite at home on the Fish Co land with the moored boats as a backdrop. The seat was designed by the Brunswick Anglers Club as a half a fishing boat. It was built by Dave Ashton, Stewy Coles and members of the U₃A Mens Shed in Mullumbimby and transported to the site. It provides a fun place for children and families to enjoy while picnicking.

All are welcome to the launch starting at 11am at the boat harbour and then moving to the skatepark at 11.30am on Thursday.

Local bookshop operators John Mitchell and Karen Martin who ran Mary Ryan's Books in Byron Bay have not had their franchise agreement renewed after a dispute with the franchisor.

'This is the fastest growing bookshop in the country, said Mitchell.

According to Mitchell, the franchisor receives a percentage of all the bookshop sales and they would have been getting good revenue from the Byron bookshop. However, at the end of the agreement, the franchisor Bill Concannon, has said that he doesn't want Mr Mitchell to continue as the franchisee of the bookshop.

'We have had a recent dispute with the franchisor as he wanted to become more involved,' said Mitchell.

'He said we were no longer welcome because of irreconcilable differences.'

Mitchell is required to offer all the assets of the bookshop to Concannon and is now restrained from trading in Byron Bay for the next two years under the franchise agreement.

Mitchell said that, 'Though we are no longer trading, we are still left with a very expensive lease on the bookshop. The franchisor has an option to take on the lease. However, he says they are yet to be informed if that is the case.

Concannon confirmed with The Echo that the bookshop would continue in the same location and said, 'Yes, they (the future franchisee) would take on the lease?

'I am negotiating with potential operators of the store for the ongoing future of the bookshop.

Term ended

'He wasn't removed. His term came to an end, he said.

John and Karen have decided that they will continue their love of books and they will be trading out of The Bookworm at Lennox which is opening this Saturday.

Ben Law to star in locally made web series

The young woman stands in front of the bathroom mirror - an internal battle raging.

Does she follow her impulses and sleep with her new friend on the first date, or take a more conservative course and quietly usher him to the door?

It's the kind of dilemma that has plagued countless women and more than a few men as they navigate the perils of dating.

And that makes it perfect fodder for a new web series, to be shot in Byron Bay next month.

Freudian Slip is a six-part comedy series exploring the inner turmoil that accompanies romance and dating.

Each bite-sized episode explores a different dating dilemma from a woman's perspective, and the competing voices in her head.

Local writer and director Clare Sladden says the series will 'externalise women's doubts and dilemmas.

Grant to help teenagers get financially savvy

A $10,000 grant to the Byron Youth Service (BYS) will soon be assisting young people to become more financially literate.

The grant is from the philanthropic division of the Financial Planning Association of Australia (FPA), which awards grants to community not-for-profit organisations with programs for socially and financially disadvantaged young Australians.

Byron Youth Service manager Teeva Blatt said, 'The idea of offering a financial literacy course came from young people themselves, in a survey we conducted in 2016.

'We asked year nine and ten students what they would learn if they could learn anything they wanted, and it was surprising how many answers were practical, basic know-how: how to do taxes, how to budget etc.

'Getting this grant is so satisfying because it means we'll be able to respond to that feedback.

'The funding will provide the $-Smart Youth financial literacy course participants with workbooks, receipt holders and calculators to encourage students to maintain their learning well beyond the time of the course.

'The outcomes of this course are numerous,' said

Ms Blatt. 'Young people transitioning to adulthood will be empowered with knowledge of the real costs of living, get basic budgeting skills, understand superannuation and how to build savings."

'Such knowledge is sure to increase their confidence and self-esteem'.

Rotunda eviction notice withdrawn

An urgency motion by Greens mayor Simon Richardson at last Thursday's extraordinary meeting will see an eviction notice withdrawn for Byron Environment Centre's rotunda in Railway Park, Byron Bay.

Councillors have also asked Council staff to provide a report on the decision making process that led to the removal of three trees in Railway Park at Byron Bay in late October.

Cr Richardson told the chamber that owing to the tree removal and eviction notice in the park, 'Community faith in the process is at an all time low.

'Clearly mistakes were made. I don't know how wilful or deliberate they were but the bottom line is mistakes were made with communication.

The motion was supported by all councillors except Cr Alan Hunter.

Cr Richardson told The Echo, 'No trees in Railway Park were cut down owing to borer [insect infestation].

'There were a few reasons for the decision and I am currently obtaining information on this.

Contradiction

The mayor's statement contradicts general manager Ken Gainger's claim that one tree contained borer.

When The Echo asked for the arborist's report or DA relating to the tree felling, acting general manager Mark Arnold replied the report will be discussed at a future Council meeting.

Mr Arnold said, 'Councillors have also asked that no further landscaping or infrastructure works be done in Railway Park until they adopt the Railway Square Beautification plan?

Byron Council extends E-zone review period

Chris Dobney

Byron Shire Council has extended the period of review for its revised environmental zones to December 8, following widespread interest from landholders in the process.

Environmental zones were excised from the Local Environment Plans (LEPs) of five northern rivers councils in 2012 by the former local government minister, then Ballina National Party MP Don Page.

Mr Page's actions headed off a revolt by many landholders, who claimed councils were unfairly using Ezones to penalise farmers participating in Landcare and similar voluntary regeneration programs.

Some five years later, the resulting review of E2 (environment protection) zones and E3 (environment management) zones requires that they be applied by councils only if conservation has been the primary use of the land over the past two years.

Grazing allowed

The proposal goes further to head off complaints by farmers by allowing grazing in the understorey of both zones, something that will likely raise the ire of conservationists.

The Department of Planning and Environment (DoPE) review says, 'The criteria for the application of the E2 zone will ensure that it is only applied to land containing vegetation with significant environmental attributes that is being used primarily for environmental conservation purposes.

'Listing extensive agriculture as "permitted with development consent" in the E2 zone land use table, would ensure farmers do not have to rely on "existing use rights" if an E2 zone is applied to land that is being used for agricultural activities.'

'It will also provide opportunity for new agricultural activities that may be consistent with the E2 zone objectives, to be considered by a council through a development application process.

'Such activities would constitute those that do not destroy, damage or have an adverse effect on areas of high ecological, scientific or cultural values.

'This is expected to be limited to activities such as understorey grazing.'

Not all are happy

Despite the considerable concessions, not all landholders are happy with the arrangements: one who wished to remain anonymous wrote to The Echo saying he felt he was being penalised for doing the right thing.

'People who still have vegetation on their property - ie have not bulldozed it - are been scapegoated by Council.

'They are [the ones] having constraints placed upon them.

'Whereas those who are bulldozing, in some cases to build additional dwellings some illegal - for profit, are being encouraged and rewarded.

'If the zones are to be imposed, should not they be on those who've already damaged the environment?'

The writer gave the example of 'property A', which he said has six neighbouring properties on the boundary fence.

'Two have carried out extensive excavation work involving the removal of native vegetation and the destruction of natural watercourses damaging property A.

'Another property is a macadamia plantation and another has been used for commercial activity that is illegal in its zone.

'But it is A that has been notified of potential E zoning. Neighbouring properties appear to have Council's blessing,' he said.

But Wayne Penn of Binna

Burra, who has an E2 zoning pending on his property is concerned that the new rules appear to override an 'in perpetuity' Registered Property Agreement entered into by a previous owner with the then NSW Department of Land and Water Conservation in 1999.

'Part of that agreement requires the owner to "exclude grazing by domestic stock from the agreement area", he told The Echo.

Future owners?

'I do not farm my land, but it appears anyone who was to buy it from me could now legally allow cattle to trample and graze on the precious understorey of this very fragile ecosystem.

'By comparison, under the new agreement, I would be prevented from undertaking activities that are much more compatible with an E2 zoning, for example: bed and breakfast accommodation, primitive camping, ecotourism or passive recreation.

'This seems like a complete contradiction in priorities to me - and a complete capitulation to National Party interests,' Mr Penn said.

Byron Shire landholders who have E2 or E3 zones pending on part of their properties should have received a letter from Council dated October 9 encouraging them to go to Council's website for further information and/or to request a review.

Byron Shire Council was approached several times for comment for this article but failed to respond by dead-

Councillors scramble to regain control from staff

What is happening inside Council is anyone's guess, but what we do know is that there is a growing list of transgressions by staff, and in particular by the most senior bureaucrat: general manager Ken Gainger.

And the nine councillors who were elected just over a year ago appear to be floundering about without a clue of what to

As a refresher, councillors formulate policy while staff enact that policy. With roughly 260 staff and a $73m budget (November 2016 figures), Council looms large over everything else in the Shire. There's a lot at stake, and for democracy to work, responsibilities and integrity need to be upheld.

First, trees were chopped down without warning in Railway Park and then staff attempted to evict the Byron Environment Centre rotunda with misleading information.

Then it emerges that again, there were misleading statements surrounding the push to erect a transit centre on Butler Street Reserve (page 1 story).

In both instances, the Byron Bay masterplan leadership team were incorrectly implicated, either by staff or the GM.

The Echo has reported that the Byron Bay masterplan leadership team were left out of the masterplan process for both Railway Park and Butler Street; instead staff made it look like it was the leadership's idea to remove the Railway Park rotunda and plonk a transit centre on Butler Street Reserve.

This is looking less like mistakes and more like a pattern. There are plenty of avenues for councillors to tighten up this

Just one is to lodge a code of conduct complaint against the general manager to the NSW Office of Local Government.

Council's own Code Of Conduct 2016 policy states under 'Development decisions' (page 4): 'You must ensure that development decisions are properly made and that parties involved in the development process are dealt with fairly.

The Byron Bay masterplan leadership team are clearly supposed to be involved in the decision process – at least with the Railway Park anyway.

They appear to have been treated unfairly.

Councillors may also want to consider a review of their delegated authority to the GM (LGA, Section 380, Review of delegations) to ensure legal avenues are not being pursued against residents that damage the reputation of Council (page 1 story).

It's just so bizarre to be at this point, given the GM's long and respected career in the public service. The GM's actions do not indicate corruption because there is nothing to be gained other than rapidly unrolling his own vision of Byron Bay at the expense of everyone else. And to his credit, he was quick to apologise for chopping the trees down in the first place.

So - where to from here?

Rule of law becomes one more problem for lawyer PM

aking a break between grave matters of national security and remembering the holocaust in Israel, Malcolm Turnbull said somewhat incongruously that he was having more fun than he had ever had in his life.

I don't know what he was smoking, but I wish he would send me some of it.

Alternatively he may have just admitted a devotion to masochism - or, of course, he may be declining into terminal insouciance. But more likely it was simple bravado, a defiant declaration that as everything around him is turning to shit, he is still happily undeterred, or maybe under turd, getting on with the job of delivering good government.

Okay, he has lost two ministers to the High Court and was forced to defend a third over what used to be the capital offence of misleading parliament, but he still has what he called a majority of 75 in the House of Representatives. Well, he does until some of them defect, which is not out of the question.

And even if one or two do, the government will not fall he can still rely on at least three of the crossbenchers if it comes to a vote of no confidence.

So, what's the problem? Even when he discovered, belatedly, that the procrastinating Stephen Parry had joined those leaving the building after admitting dual citizenship by descent (or dissent, as one government press release whimsically put it) he was said to be furious, but his public demeanour was as bland as ever: he was disappointed, he said, but it was time to go on with business as usual, which sounded to his beleaguered colleagues like more of a threat than a promise.

And when he returned home to find that one of his closest allies, Josh Frydenberg, could also be embroiled in the chaos, he replied more in sorrow than in anger: it was time to end the witch hunt and to return to the land of common sense and the rule of law.

But in fact, common sense and the rule of law was precisely the problem. Initially, Turnbull had maintained that there were no real worries over the outing of three potential dual nationals: the only reason to refer them to the High Court was to establish clarity over section 44 of the constitution.

move on before some unlucky victim of a parking fine asked them to act on their behalf and copped seven years in the slammer as a result.

After all, Turnbull reassured the army of nervous Nellies wetting their beds in the party room, this was all a beat up by the elitists in the press gallery: no-one cared about it in the pubs and clubs. And indeed, the voters would much prefer not to have the government's incompetence, contradictions and general shenanigans not thrust upon them day after day, week after week, month after month.

But regrettably they have

Very few, including Barnaby Joyce himself, shared Turnbull's optimism...

by Mungo MacCallum

'The deputy prime minister,' our leader thundered, 'is entitled to sit in this place and the High Court will so hold.

Actually very few, including Barnaby Joyce himself, shared Turnbull's optimism, but hey, he was a trained lawyer and he had (or at least he said he had) unimpeachable advice from the government's current solicitor-general, Stephen Donahue, QC. There were ways around the constitution and surely the Court, in its wisdom, would devise a loophole or two to save the ignorant from themselves.

But alas, when the judges did deliver clarity it was with the unanimous and unambiguous verdict that section 44 meant exactly what it said - no room for ducking and weaving. So Turnbull and his Attorney-General, the accidentprone George Brandis, nudged Donaghue in the direction of a passing bus and decided to no real choice - the government just keeps on keeping on, business as usual. And as usual Turnbull will not, cannot, break the cycle.

As almost always, there is an obvious solution: the comprehensive audit of all members and senators being pushed by backbenchers on both sides of the aisle, as well as most of the crossbench and a very large section of the media. Even Bill Shorten, resistant at first, is prepared to work out a formula, and not merely to wedge the government: he, like many others, is concerned that the legitimacy of our system of parliamentary democracy is at stake if things are left to drag on and that witch hunts and, more importantly, real hunts, continue tearing the institutions apart.

Common sense and the rule of law would suggest that an audit is the quickest and cleanest way out of the mess, even if some luckless and negligent individuals are embarrassed.

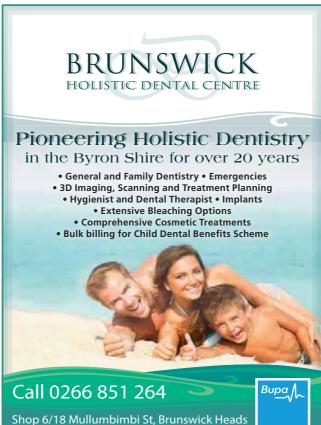

And the habit of a lifetime suggests that sooner or later Turnbull will capitulate - as dilatory as Stephen Parry, and in a way that fails to convince even the most credulous of his sincerity, but he will roll over, insisting, of course, that it will not actually be an audit, but some other mechanism serving precisely the same purpose - so he can still pretend that he is in charge.

And he will be hoping like hell that any future victims will be on the Labor side - one byelection, thankfully in a safe seat, is quite enough for the moment. But in fact the last couple of weeks of the parliamentary session will be a write-off anyway, with the same sex marriage result and its aftermath, the QLD election and the wash-up over the One Nation insurgency, and the inevitable resolution over the Manus Island standoff, which Turnbull cannot avoid by saying it is entirely up to Papua New Guinea because they are a sovereign nation.

After all, successive Australian prime ministers have, effectively, paid our nearest neighbour to remove Australia's unwanted responsibilities - people trafficking, some would say, but what the hell, we stopped the boats, and that is something to cling to. God knows, there hasn't been much else to crow about in this annus horribilis.

It will come to an end - or if not an end, then an intermission. Turnbull and his troops will be desperately hoping that 2018 will bring better tidings, but this appears unlikely, given the record of the last two years. Certainly not when Tony Abbott and the right-wing rump are around, and they are not gong away.

Happy Hogmanay, Malcolm.

Fare-thee-well

With former councillor and Byron Greens founding member Tom Tabart leaving the Shire and moving back to Victoria there will be a huge gap in the knowledge base of local issues, the functioning of Council and local and state political history.

Tom was a Greens candidate for many state and federal elections and spent eight years as a Byron Shire councillor.

But many know of him through his prolific letter writing over the last quarter of a century. When I asked him how many letters published, he guesstimated 300. A great achievement!

For the many who encountered Tom, they know he was a fierce advocate for community rights and a fierce opponent of the wrongdoings of power. What is often misunderstood about Tom's public musings is that they were usually the last resort, not the first. Over the years, some people have been annoyed and/or frustrated at his intense focus and his sometimes acerbic style but I know that this emerged after his attempts to deal with matters away from the public gaze.

Having known him since 1993 I've been amazed at his boundless energy and political skills. Tom read Rachel Carson's Silent Spring in 1970 and was inspired to study science. As a scientist, an activist and a Green, he applied himself to every issue with an acute focus on achieving the best possible outcome with a precautionary principle approach.

His work as a councillor was detailed and determined. with many hours spent as a committee member focussing on sewerage, waste, transport, finances and governance issues, including code of conduct. He was responsible for many substantial outcomes. As a Brunswick resident he took a keen interest in the caravan parks and crown land, hence the recent disappointment with current circumstances.

As a Green candidate he focussed attention on the Pacific Highway upgrade and the unnecessary destruction of irreplaceable biodiversity, the trashing of our public forests and the madness of burning forest and sugar cane 'waste' as green energy.

For me personally he was a loyal friend and confidante and I will miss him enormously. For shire residents, you will miss him too, even if you don't realise, but he always had your back and Byron needs people like Tom, now more than ever.

Forced out?

Because the Council has approved a two-storey, five bedroom, five bathroom house plus studio and pool to be built two metres away from our house, depriving us of most of our privacy and winter sun, we may have to reconsider living here.

I have spoken to the owner building the house next door and have been told it will be 'holiday let' as there is no way he would ever want to live in Byron Bay.

With the noise and constant parties that will surely follow, life here may become intolerable and we will be forced to leave, and do what everyone else is doing and rent to holiday makers.

Why not? When you can get $45,000 for 3 weeks rent from 'schoolies', by cramming 10-15 bunk beds into your house and charging the going rate which is $1,000 per head, per week.

I do not want to be forced out of my granny flat but I am sick of phoning the police at 2am because I am still awake from some nightclub or allnight party.

What's left of our dwindling 'community' is slowly being sold to greedy developers who quickly subdivide the blocks, throw up the biggest house they can get away with, holiday let it and move onto the next one.

So you ask me for what purpose my granny flat will be used. Well at the moment it's where my husband and I reside. As for the future? Well, who knows?

I wonder how many bunks will fit into a granny flat.

Protectionism

Why is the Council so relentlessly pursuing the oppressive E₃ zonings in Main Arm?

Over the past forty years we have reafforested this valley without Council's assistance. So why lock up our land under these poorly conceived laws?

Whose idea was this? We certainly didn't vote for it. To protect regrowth forest by removing our right to freely manage it is plain dangerous.

Our roads and bridges are in a pitiful condition, and the fire trails on the northern side of the valley have not been maintained for decades - so when there is a major fire the fire brigades won't be able to protect us - while Council is spending significant money on implementing these poorly conceived laws.

If you're going to forcefully create a massive firetrap - make sure we are safe! This appears to be a politically oppressive exercise to justify the existence of even more bureaucrats. Basically very poor science. Leave us alone, Council - or fix the infrastructure first. When lives and homes are lost, the blood will be on Council's hands.

Our responsibility

The experts are saying that the gravest threat facing the planet over the next decade is climate change. As the devastating impacts of climate change will affect each and every one of us, it is up to governments at all levels and all members of the community to take responsibility and do something about it.

Our Tweed Greens mayor Katie Milne has done just that. She put up a successful notice of motion at the 27 October meeting for Council to write to the prime minister and Queensland premier to express Council's concern about the extraction of 2.3 billion tonnes of coal from Adani's planned Carmichael mine in the Galilee Basin, which would result in 4.6 billion tonnes of CO2 emissions.

The resolution also requires disclosure by civil construction tenders of any involvement in providing services to, or contracting for, the development and operation of this mine and consideration of a Council policy position if that is the case. A similar motion was recently passed by the Lismore Council.

The inaugural Byron Bay Guitar Festival will be held from November 10 – 12, 2017 at the iconic Byron Bay Brewery.

Festival director and Byron Music's Nick Sergi says the guitar is as much about the people as it is a musical instrument. 'The Byron Bay Guitar Festival will celebrate both the minds that innovate and the legends who inspire,' he says.

'This festival will present 43 live performances on two stages from Australia's best guitarists, including Kevin Borich, Phil Emmanuel, Jeff Lang, Fiona Boyes, Paul George and Steve Edmonds. Alongside them will be a huge list of local and emerging talent, including the legendary Jim Kelly, Greg Lyon and the Hip Operation, Fergo & The Burden and Azo Bell.

The Brewery venue will be transformed into a guitarists' heaven, while Byron Music will take over the carpark and showcase the best guitars and gear from sponsors and partners, including Fender, Yamaha, Vox Amplification, Ernie Ball/Musicman and Cort brands.

'There will be a huge list of other activities, including ten specialty seminars and presentations in the Pighouse Flicks theatre, presented by artists and major sponsors. There will be live painting, carpark performances from Byron

Music School students, vintage guitar displays and the ultimate guitarist raffle, with prizes totalling nearly $10,000! All proceeds will go to our charitable partners MMAD, BUDDI and Be Happy Music Club.'

Nick says Byron Bay is famous for our arts and cultural events and natural surroundings.

'The area is home to a long list of professional musicians and a hub of activity for all music enthusiasts - it really is the perfect destination for a guitar festival!

Council's guiding principles, it should 'carry out its functions in a way that facilitates a local community that is strong, healthy and prosperous'. Their responsibilities therefore embrace all the issues which put residents at risk, eg extreme weather events, homelessness, inequality and domestic violence.

If the issue is not within their jurisdiction, it is up to Council to make recommendations to the relevant state or federal body and advocate for better outcomes for residents. Their responsibility goes well beyond roads, rates and rubbish.

If we are serious about reducing the impacts of climate change, we should be phasing out existing coal mines, not building new ones.

If New Zealand can plan for a transition to 100 per cent renewable energy by 2035, so can we!

> Lynette Dickinson Pottsville

McAuleys Lane

One has to acknowledge that Council does a good job generally in management of its large portfolio; however, from time to time baffling decisions are made. The speed limit in McAuleys Lane is a case in point.

For some reason Council has sign-posted McAuleys Lane as having an unlimited speed limit – same as for some main roads. Say what?

Recommending speeds to 100kph in this section of road borders on insanity. Sustained collisions, possibly deaths, doubtless will result. Why? 1. Because McAuleys crosses two intersections, Bilin Road in particular being quite busy with blind spots to left and right. 2. There are more than 30 hidden driveways in the Lane. 3. The road consists of numerous tight bends (including one blind corner that does not allow passing). 4. It is used by pedestrians, cyclists and horse riders. 5. The road surface is poor in places with loose gravel potholes etc requiring evasive action.

I do hope Council acts immediately on this matter. A speed limit of 50kph for the entire length of McAuleys Lane may be appropriate, particularly to slow the lunatic fringe, you know the ones, the drivers that tailgate vehicles travelling at 80kph in 80kph zones with double lanes preventing passing.

Jeremy Gilder Myocum

The expert

Who'da thunk Council's inhouse solicitor Ralph James was a comedian?

I put a question at the September Council meeting and in the October agenda (p. 243) Mr James asserts that Council did actually employ expert witnesses in defending the appeal over Cr Hunter's development in Myocum. He implies that they didn't need to appear in court because they largely agreed with Cr Hunter's own expert witnesses. He disclaims any suggestion of cosiness by stating: 'The role of the expert witness is to assist the Court. Their overriding duty is to the Court and not to his or her client... Importantly the expert witness is not to be an advocate for a party [to a court case].

Hilarious stuff indeed to suggest that a consultant would never do the bidding of the person paying the bill! Lawyers sometimes make similar claims about their own profession, all the while trying to conceal their smirks, of course.

Mr James becomes a little defensive when he goes on to say: 'The expert witness's duty is to work co-operatively with other experts and to endeavour to reach agreement.'

Hang on Ralph; I'm not suggesting that you or the GM have deliberately selected tame consultants, OK?

For a start I'd have to know their names – which you haven't provided. I do point out though that it's a universal axiom that consultants who are prepared to cut corners get far more work than those who stick to principles.

However, the part of Mr James's revelations that worries me is that councillors did vote not to defend Cr Hunter's appeal (ie it wasn't the GM acting wholly under delegated authority). So how does a council which voted against a development proposal suddenly roll over on the courthouse steps?

Clearly a key part was played by legal advice. Legal advice is privileged so I'm unlikely to ever see it, there being no leakers on Council. Also the debate itself was held in confidential session, so councillors can't even talk about what was said by whom.

Now you can't go into confidential session without a vote, and reasons have to be provided. I'll bet my middle testicle that the old ploy was used: 'There's legal advice involved, so we have to exclude the public.' Mr James, I've seen past GMs introduce legal advice even though it wasn't required, just to keep the public in ignorance; so forgive me if I'm suspicious.

Finally I note that Council agreed to allow Cr Hunter's development, but successfully imposed its own consent conditions. Deary me, what a resounding victory. Pity that Cr Hunter's alleged past infringements of consent conditions went quite unpunished by Council.

My summary of the matter is that councillors and Myocum residents got comprehensively rolled using a series of textbook ploys. Once again His Smugness Simon Richardson noticed nothing.

Solar rebates are set to decrease

Australian households and businesses continue to embrace solar energy at a rapid pace in a bid to avoid rising electricity costs.

The STC delivers real upfront savings to Aussies moving towards renewable energy and is not to be confused with the feed it tariff that is an ongoing discount determined by your electricity retailer (that's a story for another day). So just what is an STC and why do you need them right now?

Understanding the federal STC rebate

The federal government currently offers a financial incentive designed to encourage Australian homes, businesses and community groups to take up solar in a bid to meet our renewable energy target by 2030. This incentive comes in the form of an STC (Small scale Technology Certificate) which is applied directly to the solar system at the time of installation. As the end user, you do not need to pay up front or claim any money back, you are not out of pocket, the incentive is built in to your upfront cost of your solar system.

Under the governments Renewable Energy Target scheme (RET), the current STC calculation will reduce again at the end of the year and will do so each year until it is phased out in 2030, so if you've been considering solar, now is the time to act. Today, the STC incentive for a 6.6kW system is just shy of $4,200.00, fast forward to January and the annualisation of the STC scheme has come into effect and this will have dropped significantly to around $3,890.00, dependant on the STC value, that's a difference of $400 in a matter of months.

Act Now

To secure the current STC price, it's worth that noting your solar system must be installed and operational before the 31st of December, taking into account that solar just doesn't happen overnight. By the time you've signed your contract, its then over to the supply authority to apply for a grid connect, and this can take anywhere from 2 to 8 weeks, and then there's installation and finally operation. From the time you sign, to the time your STC's take effect, you will need to allow a period of eight weeks, so don't delay, ACT NOW and save yourself some serious money before the December 31st deadline.

We are genuinely passionate about the benefits of quality energy solutions designed to deliver you real savings. CHESS by Ian Rogers

In a highly controversial move, veteran Vladimir Kramnik has 2018' been granted a wild card to the eight player event from which Magnus Carlsen's next World Championship challenger will be of the world's best players for more than two decades, holding the traditional matchplay World Championship title between 2000 and 2008. But in 2017 Kramnik's star faded, as he dropped from world number three at the start of the year to number seven.

However, Kramnik is Russian, as are the major sponsors of next March's Candidates tournament

It was therefore no surprise that when tournament organisers Agon announced Kramnik's wild card their official announce-Federation President Andrey Filatov saying, 'Now Russia has Champion. I very much hope Russian takeover of Crimea.

that a Russian chess player will capture Berlin" and will face Magnus Carlsen in November

Such statements make a mock-2018 Candidates tournament, the ery of the claim by Agon that the wild card to the Candidates tournament has been granted on merit, especially given that France's Maxime Vachier-Lagrave Kramnik, 42, has been one has outperformed Kramnik on every measure this year.

The decision reinforces the growing influence of the Russian government on world chess, shown most flagrantly by the use of Russian embassies to campaign for FIDE President Kirsan Iljumzhinov in 2014 and again

Agon partner Kaspersky Labs has been blamed for the theft of data from the US National Security Agency and banned from doing work for US government departments.

Candidates tournament sponsor EG Capital Advisors has very ment quoted the Russian Chess strong connections to Russian oligarch and chess fan Boris Mints, who founded the Otkritie at least two players who have bank later used by State oil giant a chance to become the chal-Rosneft to avoid the US sanctions lenger to the incumbent World placed on larger banks after the

Will the recent focus on the clothes-optional beach reduce sex-pests? I can sympathise with Jennifer Innes of Tyagarah re the problem of sexual predation at her local beach.

In her letter she reiterates many of the points covered already in the discussion. However, she says 'many of the letter writers criticising efforts to address the safety issues at the clothes optional beach at Tyagarah appear to believe in their own entitlement to be nude in public more than the entitlement of others to be safe. She provides no evidence for this statement which is patently untrue. No-one is safe on a lonely beach anywhere.

She also blames the council, NPWS, the police and the 'naturists'. She says that 'If nudity were not legal at the beach policing it would be less complex'. Also, 'the sex-pests have become an ugly and dangerous by-product of Byron's free and easy lifestyle'. Que?

And she finishes with 'A council initiative to address sex offences taking place in isolated hard-to-police locations is an urgent matter for council'. She is correct on this point. Main Beach to Clarkes Beach is the obvious answer. Great for the tourist industry.

In the meantime I suggest she drive the extra mile to Coolangatta or Ballina as others have had to drive to Tyagarah.

In passing, as one who lives naked (except when it is cold), I have not swum at Tyagarah for fear of being classified as a 'dirty old man' – a fate that we all face.

> Jim Nutter Main Arm

■ We welcome the Council's decision to put up signs on the Tyagarah nude beach and congratulate the police on restoring order at the Tyagarah tea-tree lake.

We have visited the lake several times since police patrols began in August and the tone has changed entirely. The predatory element has largely disappeared and people are enjoying the lake without the seedy undercurrent.

A random, rather than a full-time police presence has resulted in significant improvement at the lake in a very short time. We therefore have reason to expect the same strategy will produce the same results at the beach once appropriate signage is in place.

Once word gets around that it is no longer possible to commit illegal acts with impunity we will rapidly see this behaviour dwindle.

> O Redman & M Swift Byron Bay

■ I'd just like to say a huge thank you to all the people who emailed, called, wrote letters or turned up at the council chambers to let councillors know how they felt about nude bathing and the recent spate of incidents at Tyagarah. It was a difficult but necessary debate but I think the mayor summed it up well when he said that between the protection of two freedoms, that of being able to swim naked and not having to suffer sexual harassment at the beach the latter trumps the former hands down.

None of the councillors object to nudity and I don't believe anything will change for those who discreetly slip of their dacks and go for a skinny dip. They are no threat to anyone.

Those who abuse the privilege of a secluded nude beach to prey on unsuspecting beach goers, you are on notice. The stricter controls at Tyagarah with signage that clearly stipulates the 800m clothes-optional areas, 200m to the north of the Grays Lane beach access are a trial.

I would encourage people to let police know immediately of any predatory or threatening behaviour they encounter, there or at any other beach. Let's reclaim a sense of safety on our shores.

Tight corners

In reply to Alistair Bell's letter about my discussion of tight railway curves and keeping cars on the road (Letters October 25).

I should also have spoken about freight staying on our highways and thanks to Alistair pointing out the tight curves on the border loop being around 250m radius. Freight share for rail in NSW was 25 per cent in 2006 (Dr Philip Laird, Associate Professor, Wollongong University) but has dropped to less than 10 per cent due to travel and dwell times compared to road transport.

Tight curves and high gradients of the 'steam age alignment' railway line between Sydney and Brisbane is pushing more and more freight onto roads. The upgrade of the Pacific Highway is compounding this loss, and without major track straightening, deviations and gradient lowering the ratio of rail to road freight share will widen.

So yes, the 80 curves with radii of less than 400 metres on the northern rivers line will keep people in cars and freight on our highways.

Geoff Bensley Byron Bay

■ In September 2004 Price Waterhouse Coopers designed a comprehensive plan to develop a 16 train a day rail service using a lightweight railcar which would cost $28.8 million for repair of the Casino to Murwillumbah railway track. It might cost more these days but nothing like what the government's ARUP report said.

Imagine having trains running all day for locals as well as great tourist packages.

You could have a tour start from Murwillumbah station going to the Tweed Gallery for morning tea. You would just need to build a little platform on the railway line below the gallery and some steps up. Then hop back on the train to Billinudgel Hotel for lunch. Then Mullumbimby in the early afternoon for great music before heading to Byron for a late afternoon at the beach, followed by dinner and dancing. Catch the train later on that night to Lismore, Casino or Kyogle for accommodation that's very affordable.

The next day you might go to the Casino railway museum and minirail for morning tea or take a tourist bus to Nimbin, be back in Lismore for lunch before being on the train to Byron for the beach or whale watching. Dinner could be at Byron or Mullumbimby before catching the late train for accommodation at Murwillumbah.

Using the 16 train a day timetable you'd have a great tourist experience and boost local economies. Save the railway tracks for real regional tourism on trains.

Distortion of history

November 2 marks the centenary of the Balfour Declaration which established a 'national home for the Jewish people' in Palestine in exchange for Zionist influence bringing the US into WWI supporting Britain.

The Declaration insisted that 'nothing shall be done which may prejudice (Palestinian) civil and religious rights' but omitted to include their political rights which is not surprising given that Balfour revealed his pro-Zionist bias in a letter to Lord Curzon, 'Zionism... is... of far profounder import than the desires and prejudices [sic] of 700,000 Arabs who now

The Echo - The Thinking Dog's Paper

Thirty-one years have passed since Nicholas Shand dreamed up this newspaper and gathered a band of fellow dreamers to help him make it real.

In those 31 years The Echo has grown, like a magic beanstalk, far taller than we ever imagined, and it is now a feature of Shire life.

Our ongoing series on the history of our beloved rainbow rag continues this week, written by the newspaper's longest-serving drudge, David Lovejoy.

n 1989 a small ground floor office in Village ▲ Way, Mullumbimby, came on the market. It was next door to a dentist and opposite a licensed restaurant. It was not the only space Nicholas and I looked at when we decided to move the paper back to Mullumbimby, and it would definitely be very cramped, but it was the only one we could afford to buy, and it was opposite a licensed restaurant. My wife Wendy agreed to put the family house up for collateral on the mortgage and we became the proud tenants of our own premises.

Tight office, tighter team

We were a close team, which was just as well given the space we were squeezing into. The printing experiment was abandoned and we moved that part of the operation to a medium size offset press in Ballina.

The company valued our custom, to the extent of sending one of its directors to act as courier every Monday night to wait until we had finished and then convey the precious pages back to Ballina. Just how much we were valued became evident when we later moved our custom and the press went bankrupt without the regular income from The Echo.

The period after our return from Brunswick Heads was a pleasant one. The licensed restaurant on the other side of the lane was taken over by Main Arm friends Gavan and Helen, who provided a bar for Echo hacks to prop up at the end of the day.

We seemed to have persuaded even the most conservative advertisers to let us have our editorial freedom: one week we devoted an entire issue to the legalisation of cannabis with hardly a squawk in response. In this positive atmosphere the newspaper continued to expand until forty-eight A4 pages was a regular event. The deluge of letters we received was a good indicator of our acceptance with readers, and so was the growth of our classified advertising columns.

The number of staff grew too. In addition to Nicholas, Jeff, Michael and me, we had a regular team of two or three part-timers designing and producing ads, Tuppy Lang overseeing the classifieds, Sandy O'Keefe on reception, Jeff Taylor in accounts, and the boisterous presence of Carol Page.

Carol was initially brought in to type, file and help with reception, but she proved to have many talents, eventually working with success in every Echo department except the art room. By the time she left the company many years as collectors' items. later she had become an accomplished journalist and used her experience to start a newspaper, the Snowy Rivers Echo, in Jindabyne, a publication which still exists despite Carol's tragically early death.

Trials of the tip

In those days we tried to develop the company in a businesslike way, although we did not often stray from the newspaper and what we knew best. Perhaps this was because of our first foray into merchandising. When we were still in Brunswick we had a thousand t-shirts printed with various designs, including 'The Echo - the Thinking Dog's Paper'. The shirts came neatly folded in ten black plastic bags. We opened one, distributed the contents to friends and staff, and left the remaining bags in the press room overnight.

The next day we discovered that they had all been left out for the garbage truck, and despite my best efforts foraging at the tip they were gone forever, leaving the handful of remaining shirts

Another marketing ploy was inadvertent: bored with laying out the television guide every week, I started adding unauthorised comments, including ridiculous plot lines for soaps like Neighbours which were developed, a sentence or two at a time, over the course of the week's programs. Readers loved this subversion, and chunks of The Echo's enhanced TV Guide were quoted as far afield as Brisbane's Courier Mail.

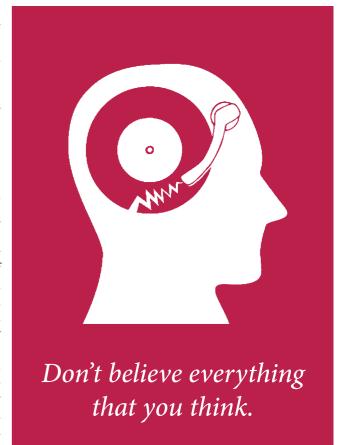

Outrageous insults

One recipient of the TV Guide's satirical barbs was the singer Issi Dye. Two evenings a week he infested the breaks in the programs of the only commercial channel then operating in the region, breathlessly plugging local businesses - who thereby saved themselves the expense of having professional advertisements made. But no matter how outrageous our insults, Issi would smile and take the 'no such thing as bad publicity' line. In the end we Messrs Turnbull, Shorten plus a huge contingent of senior politicians, military, media and relatives and friends of the Australian Light Horse Brigade made the pilgrimage to Beersheba and although Shorten initially visited the West Bank, the Palestinians were completely extirpated.

Netanyahu's Beersheba centenary address stated, Exactly 100 years ago, brave ANZAC soldiers liberated Beersheba for the sons and daughters of Abraham and opened the gateway for the Jewish people to reenter the stage of history'. However, both Jews and Muslims trace their origins to Abraham, Jews through Isaac and Muslims through Ishmael, so why did he limit the ANZAC contribution only to Jews and why were our politicians complicit in this gross distortion of history?

Council control

You cannot comply with the thousands of regulations within our Council planning system because they are inconsistent, not site specific, and many are conflicting or mutually exclusive.

This is the fundamental flaw entrenched in our statute based planning system which makes it open to exploitation and abuse. They are called planning controls because this is their intent - to control.

The Council, as the approving authority, has a choice to support or reject any community action. This should be based on support, guidance and encouragement of community and individual initiatives - not control for the sake of control, to justify power and authority or to appease corporate interests.

Proper planning is all about leadership and working collectively towards a common goal based on respect for nature and each other.

In the light of recent insensitive actions by Council in the Byron town centre and our villages I would ask them: Don't control us, support us. Don't conquer us, encourage us; don't fear us, respect us; don't hate us, love us. Because we are you and you are us. We all have a choice and what we choose will be our future.

■ The recent eviction notice to the Byron Environment Centre (BEC) rotunda in Railway Park and the felling of trees; raises certain questions of the vulnerability of the Byron community to the dictates of crony capitalism.

Crony capitalism is a term describing an economy in which success in business depends on close relationships between business people and government, including local government.

This economy spills over into the nexus between the political class and business distorting the economy and society - corrupting public serving and social ideals.

It is also used to describe governmental decisions favouring 'cronies' of governmental officials. Crony capitalism is a welfare tool unto itself. It is the practice of partiality; business granted by the political class to the cronies, who in turn amass money through this nexus of relationships.

It could be viewed as a secret state, posing as transparent governance. It uses double-speak to hide its real agenda. It thrives on secrets and surprises and there is usually a crony who does the dirty work on the community... 'and doesn't know a thing.'

However, it is far from transparent. Hence the advance of cronies in obtaining Brunswick for capital gain, the legal oppression of the Butler Street community and the eviction notice to the BEC to get rid of the hippies and develop... quickly.

To cronies social justice is a nuisance, ecological integrity a worse hinderance to development, and public space for communities a down-right socialist idea!

Crony capitalism is about corporate welfare supported by governments upholding favoristic monetary policies.

It is the most dangerous of economies, but worse, it is the 'iron fist in the velvet glove'. It thrives on dispossession of communities and steals rights from future generations.

The Harvey scale

When a natural disaster occurs, its ferocity is measured on a scale of zero to ten. A storm creating no real damage is categorised in the low range whilst a devastating hurricane like Katrina receives a big score.

The latest media bandwagon appears to centre on incorrect sexual actions taken mostly by men of power in film and television, on vulnerable women.

One must not belittle or brush aside these events. Twenty years ago they were as common as they are today, but the difference now is the use of social media as judge and perhaps sadly, jury.

How often do you hear the phrase 'oh, I'll just ask Google' as if this inanimate algorithm is the supreme source of moral judgement and truth.

But who is currently telling the truth and not just jumping on the social media bandwagon? And is an incorrect advance at a drinks party a hangable offence? It is well known that aspirants will go to extreme ends for a few column inches of national fame.

A UK politician apologised via the media for touching the knee of a female reporter over 15 years ago. When asked for a comment the well known and forthright reporter said 'can't remember, seems inconsequential, no one hurt, let's get on with our lives'.

They both took it upon themselves to control the story. However, social media is a hungry beast. Devouring without control. Egged on by users bent on having their views known, whether accurate or balanced.

Harvey Weinstein appears to have been an ogre in the film industry. Dozens have used the electronic media to tap a nail in his coffin. Nothing he says or does now will change the way the internet has decided to treat him.

Similarly Kevin Spacey is now tarred with the story of an alleged attack on a 14-yearold, 30 years ago. He can't recall the incident but is remorseful and apologetic. Out of the woodwork have now come more, accusing him of exposure, etc. Social media loves nothing more than a bit of slap and tickle, especially if it's linked to a celebrity – even better if they are gay. What would they have made of Laurence Olivier? Now Dustin Hoffman is yet another to feel the weight of mass media on his shoulders.

The problem appears to be that all these accusations are being lumped under one banner. What they are saying is that an under age advance, or non-consensual sex is equal to a politician putting his hand on a journalist's knee during dinner.

Is this right and fair? Social media doesn't really allow a differentiation. It's all or nothing. Journalism is becoming more about social comment and less about hard hitting investigation. That is, what do the social blogs think rather than what did you discover from factual evidence.

Again the referee is absent. So we need a scale – I propose calling it The Harvey Scale.

Paid parking

There are many things that Byron Council does that I may disagree with, but paid parking is not one of them.

I may not like the fact that the sleepy idyllic backwater escape from the city I fell in love with many years ago is no more. Parking stations are a reminder of what has been lost.

I do not like the fact that I am getting old either, but this and the fact that the Byron of my youth is no more are the reality. Trying to find a park to pick up a parcel from the post office or to go to the chemist in Bangalow, is often difficult. Even a quiet afternoon drink at the pub is trying most days; trying to get a place to park. But what is more trying is having to pay an annual fee to park in Byron Bay as a ratepayer. And even more trying than that, is to suffer a nearly one-third increase in my annual land rates. All this to deal with a cost imposed on the Shire by new arrivals, tourists, and day trippers.

They love the region as much as long-time locals do. But we are killing the thing that we all love. This is not a new phenomenon, it has happened around the world and throughout history when people migrate to, or holiday in, idyllic places.

The secret to survival is not to kill the goose that laid the golden egg. Paid parking is doing little to diminish the things that attracted most of us here in the first place. An increase in the number of people, cars, noise, rubbish and wearing infrastructure (roads, parks, public toilets, play areas) are some of the problems we face because of more people. Simply put, the social and natural environment of the region is being changed by an increase in the number of people here.

Paid parking will not do much to change the population pressure; but it will impose some order on how people behave when they come and it will provide some money to deal with some of the wear and tear they impose. Just as a simple letter cannot do much to solve the big problems we face, neither can paid parking; but they can help.

Sex, lies and social media: I tweet therefore I am

Daniel Sage

Like the press pretty much everywhere, the UK media is in a frenzy of outing and shaming rapists, sex pests, touchers and all sorts of previously hidden pervs and miscreants. And a bloody good job the turgid status quo is being challenged and reframed at last to rouse society not to tolerate base behaviour and generally to encourage people to ask before they take, especially when it comes to other people's bodies.

Caution essential

A post-Weinstein world is reshaping fast before our noses, under a firestorm of victims' stories and perpetrator scandal. In the thick smoke it can be hard to see the flames, especially when so many stories are from so long ago. Memory is a notoriously fragile construct. And so, caution is essential in apportioning blame accurately.

But equally, it is vital victims are emboldened to report what has happened to them and to be heard and taken seriously. The freezing, terrible shame must be burned off.

A healing virus

Listen. Don't turn a blind eye. Speak up. These are the activating key words released like a healing virus into 2017.

May they bring peace, justice, and change.

This week in Britain, the defence minister, Sir Michael Fallon, fell on his sword, admitting 'inappropriate sexual behaviour' towards a junior, Julia Hartley-Brewer, 15 years ago.

Hearing the news, Hartley-Brewer commented, 'If he has gone because he touched my knee 15 years ago, that is genuinely the most absurd reason for anyone to have lost their job in the history of the universe, so I hope it is not because of that.'

Few believe it is the only reason and fresh allegations are expected soon. It's impossible to know what's going on behind the scenes.

The lives of public figures are always skewed by what the media can see and show. And in many instances, the sheer clamour of outrage then arising from a million home keyboards judging and opining befuddles and obscures exponentially.

We are living in an age of hyper commentary. I tweet therefore I am. Everyone has an opinion (on everything). Everyone is a judge. Trial by social media is an ugly business of stocks and gallows. Accusation blurs into proof. Kevin Spacey is shot to pieces in a week, but meanwhile Roman Polanski has been feted for 40 years and never brought to justice. One is condemned instantaneously, yet with the presumption of innocence; the other allowed to win awards and smile cheekily as a convicted outlaw. One was busted in 2017;

the other in 1977.

It's no surprise many of the cases reaching the news are from those heady old days. Glamour hid the filth. But now we know Jimmy Saville was doing it, Rolf Harris was doing it, Gary Glitter, Sir Edward Heath (probably, say police), the list goes on and on.

Consent is key

Happily, the differences of those 40 years may finally be ravelling up. The cry is clear: Enough! Louche, casual, sexist conduct belongs in the bin. Accountability matters. Respect is a basic. Consent is key. But the process is wild and dirty and fuzzy. Our mores change grindingly, even while sentiment erupts so fiercely.

Last Christmas, I did jury service in a murder trial at the Old Bailey. Grisly business it was, hearing what the plaintiff had got up to and having to sit across from his victim's family who were in no doubt he should be violently dispatched himself. Apart from one afternoon off when the judges went for Christmas tea, and the holiday days themselves, we endured three weeks of the laborious, forensic, technical and fanatically fair practices of the legal system.

In fairness

It was a tawdry, horrible tale. Everyone was a victim, their lives affected by ten pointless minutes of drunken belligerence. Yet the care with which each aspect was explored and mapped inspired a willingness to engage in the process, to try to be fair, to listen, to consider, to weigh and balance and then decide.

We all made judgments the whole time going along, of course. But we reserved them.

It was an experience that changed my outlook on life considerably, and, by paradox perhaps, made me see the good in people more.

It amazed me that such a critical decision about the future of the accused was left in the hands of a bunch of lay strangers. And moreover, that this method of deciding guilt, trial by jury, was deemed the best our entire civilisation had come up with in however many thousands of years crimes have been punished.

Without the evidence, and the arguments, and the time to chew it all over, it would have folded in a flash.

Let's keep the 2017 hoses pointing to where the cleaning must be done. Let's rein in pornification, so a new normal doesn't take root even more pernicious than the old. Let's remember most men are not pests or boors and are participating in making a better, more equal world. Let's make consent king and queen in all spheres. Real confidence is knowing what you want, knowing how to ask and feeling okay if the answer is no.

Disappointing vote on nuclear disarmament

John Hallam

The Australian government vote not to support the UN resolution (L45) in the General Assembly's First Committee on nuclear disarmament was disappointing.

L45 is focussed on setting up a meeting in New York that would be ideal for progressing 'step by step' moves toward nuclear disarmament such as nuclear risk reduction measures and other measures.

The resolution L45 was nonetheless adopted with 129 yes votes to 30 no votes and 12 abstentions by the First Committee recently. Last year (2016) it had been adopted by 144 yes votes, but Australia voted against it then too.

Watered down

Australia also participated in sponsoring the resolution on 'United Action with Renewed Determination toward the Total Elimination of Nuclear Weapons' with Japan, a resolution which appears to have been watered down this year, causing support to drop.

As the PND and Human Survival Project's UN nuclear disarmament campaigner I find it hard to understand where the government is coming from on this one.

On the one hand they claim to have voted against the nuclear weapons ban treaty because they are in favour of a 'progressive approach', or a 'step-by-step approach' to nuclear disarmament.

Fair enough, but the step by step approach and the ban treaty reinforce each other and do not compete. When the Australian government was faced with a genuine 'progressive approach' opportunity in the shape of L45, which is about setting up a meeting in New York that would be ideal for progressing 'step-by-step' moves toward nuclear disarmament they vote 'no'.

This is absolutely incomprehensible. The thing about a step-by-step approach of course is that you've actually got to take the steps. The government is showing no willingness to do this, and no willingness to support additional steps that would reduce the day-to-day risks of accidental apocalypse posed by nuclear weapons (though it did vote to reduce operational readiness of nuclear weapon systems in 2016).

Clear danger

Nuclear weapons pose a clear and immediate danger to civilisation and to humans as a species, right now.

The risk of nuclear weapons use and nuclear war is as great as it has ever been. Our government is failing to take immediate and sensible steps to diminish this danger, and by doing so it places national security in dire danger and puts every Australian at risk.

A nuclear weapon that does not exist can pose no danger. Eliminating nuclear weapons – really and verifiably – would eliminate the single most potent and immediate risk to civilisation and to humans as a species.

The way it should be

Of Lights and Men: or the coming of aliens...

The North is a mysterious place. In the early hours of a chilly mid-September morning, the haunting call of a loon, signalling its location to a mate, could be heard echoing across a lake in northern British Columbia. This eerie birdsong was the perfect aural accompaniment to a light show playing in the heavens

The appearance of the northern lights - aurora borealis - at the end of a long summer bicycling through the northern wild was a surreal moment. It seemed to hint at the imminent arrival of aliens, or the coming of Jesus. Whatever the case, it was apparently time to give up this earthly existence.

The northern lights are caused by electrically charged solar particles colliding with gaseous particles in the Earth's atmosphere, which become 'excited', and light up. Streamers, curtains and other assorted shafts of light - commonly green or purple - can be seen dancing about the sky for seconds, minutes or hours. The effect can be seen at high latitudes except during summer when it's never sufficiently dark. Bikers who see the lights should recognise this as an important omen and head south, promptly. (We did, and are now sheltered on Vancouver Island.)

Traditional cultures have amazing stories to accompany the lights. Tales featuring giants cooking their enemies in huge vats, or spirits playing a ball-game in the sky with a giant walrus head, seem hardly exaggerated when the lights are on display.

Stars of wonder

Pioneering conservationist John Muir, a writer prone to excessive verbiage, was especially rhapsodical in describing his encounter with the lights. 'I fancy', wrote Muir in his posthumously published Travels in Alaska, 'that if all the stars were raked together into one windrow, fused and welded and run through some celestial rolling mill, all would be required to make this one glowing white colossal bridge'. For the effusive Muir, the northern lights typified the capacity of nature to uplift the human spirit.

Writing over a century ago, Muir could scarcely have imagined the destruction subsequently wrought on our planet and the efficiency with which his 'great fresh unblighted, unredeemed wilderness' has been civilised. He went into the wild to rejoice at life; it was his cathedral.

Muir would have been horrified to hear the blasphemy of the other resident of Bob Quinn Lake that night, an itinerant geo-technician from Newfoundland who was excited about all the 'gold up in them hills' but bemoaned the presence of so much 'overburden'. 'Overburden?' I said as calmly as possible, 'we call them mountains'.

We moderns seek out wilderness for many reasons. Indeed, going into the wild is a form of secular paradise seeking. The Lemonheads' song Outdoor Type – ostensibly the lament of a greenhorn who 'lied about being the outdoor type' - can be read as a critique of the way our culture valorises the wilderness experience and portrays it as essentially masculine. Or perhaps, having ridden thousands of miles through boreal forests and subarctic tundra this past summer with the song rotating insistently through my head, I'm becoming grandiose.

Wild nature

Anyway, this particular earworm might have alerted Freud that, although not an outdoor novice, I was conscious of my deep unfamiliarity with the North. Its vast forests, hostile climate, rapacious bugs and notorious wildlife – including bears and wolverines - were certainly intimidating. But that night watching the auroral display I realised that by virtue of either good luck or good management we'd just about survived the North; a few hundred miles into BC the signs of impending civilisation were already rife. The lights seemed to come as a wink from Mother Nature herself.

A few hours after aurora borealis appeared and I took that photo, the moon rose, flooding the sky with light and extinguishing the display. At 4.30am, after transferring my photos onto the computer ensuring that I hadn't imagined the whole episode, I finally lay down to sleep; exhausted and exhilarated.

Shortly thereafter, the chill air was shattered by the scream of a chainsaw. The blasphemous geo-technician who had idled his truck half the night - apparently to ward off bears! - had run out of firewood. But the squealing Stihl might as well have been a great grey owl hooting in the distance. I was too enchanted by the spectacle that had played out in the night to care. An epiphany to be sure.

■ Mayor and Councillors, The purpose of this letter is to formally register our ongoing objection to the proposed introduction of paid parking in Bangalow.

It is incongruous that since making this decision, the larger town of Mullumbimby will not be adopting paid parking and the same proposal for Brunswick Heads is being contested.

We understand that Council desperately want new funding sources for road and paving maintenance but the points outlined present a strong case against paid parking in Bangalow:

- 1. The report that was done by MRCagney Pty Ltd on traffic in Bangalow recommended time restrictions as a first option. A comprehensive traffic flow understanding would then provide context to consider paid parking. The report acknowledged there were no appreciable congestion issues in Bangalow.
- 2. The RMS, within its paid parking guidelines, talks about paid parking as a 'final' option and that it is not introduced solely as a revenue raising device.
- 3. Funding for projects and maintenance within the Shire is limited, this is a point that the Mayor returns to continually in the minutes of the council meeting of August 24, 2017, when addressing the issue of paid parking. However, paid parking cannot solely be a revenue-raising device.

- 4. In this meeting, the mayor also stated that Bangalow's footpaths are in poor repair and that the revenue from paid parking would fund this repair. However, only S94 development contributions can be 'quarantined', so there is little confidence that this promise will be kept. Additionally, we would like to know the amount of money currently in the Section 94 fund and the plans for its use.
- 5. There is a lack of evidence supporting the amount of money paid parking will raise and comparisons between Bangalow and Byron Bay would be irrelevant because they are completely different towns.

Assuming you were able to fill 20 parks a day for seven days a week, at $4 an hour this would deliver $252,000 a year in revenue or four years to make a gross amount of $1 million, less establishment cost, monitoring and the detrimental impact on local business.

6. While revenue for council seems to be a major motivation the impact on revenue of businesses has not been considered. Councillor Paul Spooner acknowledged at the August 24 meeting, many of the shoppers in Bangalow are tourists. The need for correct change for parking will have a detrimental effect on trade and put even more pressure on businesses under the strain of sky high rents and a difficult retail period. Studies elsewhere show a 40 per cent downturn in trade following the introduction of paid parking.

- 7. Residents of Newrybar, which is part of the Ballina Shire, are documented to have a higher disposable income than many residents of the northern rivers, but do not qualify for a parking permit. They have therefore stated a preference for shopping in Ballina, rather than Bangalow.
- 8. There is generally sufficient parking availability most times of the day, according to the MRCagney study. Additionally this study was completed on a Saturday, the absolute peak day for the village, and parking capacity was still only at 90 per cent. This indicates that pressure for parking on normal business days would not be excessive.
- 9. The mayor has stated that before paid parking is introduced he will work with the Bangalow Guidance Group to identify projects that could be funded by the scheme. However this group is not scheduled to meet before January 1, 2018.

10. In 2011, Bunbury Council installed parking meters in their CBD to combat a forecast rise in population and economic conditions but has seen neither. Instead, 90 stores have closed. There are many other accounts of councils who have installed parking meters and then removed them because of unrealised benefits.

The Bangalow community is working with council staff on a village plan but the aspirations of this work are being diminished by business as usual decisions from BSC, such as paid parking, to the extent that the Guidance Group is in danger of becoming an irrelevance.

The Bangalow retail sector is currently experiencing some of the toughest business conditions in recent decades and a weak commercial sector will ultimately threaten the liveability of Bangalow. Bangalow needs some respite.

We therefore request that the motion to introduce paid parking be rescinded.

Five things that should happen at the Bonn climate talks but probably won't

On TheConversation.com Matthew Paterson and Marc Hudson examine what would actually get the climate change ball rolling

The world's leaders are meeting - again - for talks on climate change. This year's Conference of the Parties (the 23rd, hence COP23) to the United Nations climate treaty in Bonn, Germany, is not expected to be a dealclinching, make-or-break one like Paris in 2015 or Copenhagen in 2009.

That doesn't make it insignificant – the hope is that negotiators will make meaningful progress on implementing the provisions of the 2015 Paris Agreement.

Countries have agreed that they want a whole range of operational rules, deliberately left vague in Paris, to be agreed by the 2018 COP in Katowice, Poland. These include rules over financing for climate adaptation in developing countries, and for a new market mechanism to help implementation of the agreement, among others.

Climate negotiations typically involve several years of glacial progress followed by a flurry of extraordinary spectacle, involving negotiators staying up for two days straight to get a deal done. This dynamic is exhausting, and usually produces distinctly underwhelming results announced with great fanfare, along with the launch of yet another a new initiative or network. It all invites a weary cynicism about what we expect the UN process to achieve.

But if the Paris Agreement is to be anything other than a farce, it must avoid the sort of design which needs heroic politicians parachuting in once every five years. Rather, it needs countries to pay attention, to continue working patiently, revising and improving their strategies to 'bend the curve' on emissions and deal with the mess that climate change is already causing.

Here then are five things that should happen:

1. Enough with the oil, coal and gas already

Parties - nearly 200 countries plus the EU - could explicitly recognise that the 'net-zero' emissions goal in the Paris Agreement means the end of fossil fuels.

What would that mean in practice? They'd make substantive policy announcements with serious effects, like eliminating fossil fuel subsidies - which even the IMF thinks are out of hand or a coal phase-out by 2025. They'd also begin to think through how to arrange serious funding for renewables, the electrification of motorised transport and a ramping up of 'technology transfer'.

2. Sharpen the teeth of the Parties could agree that their commitments to cut emissions, known as 'nationally determined contributions' (NDCs), are inadequate and announce revised and more aggressive ones.

It was clear from the outset that these emissions cuts, taken together, would still see the world shoot past the 2°C target, let alone a 1.5°C one. Collectively, they could agree to accelerate the process of reviewing these commitments but to trigger this, countries seeking to lead would need to do this unilaterally.

3. Show us the money

Industrialised countries could announce new investments in the Green Climate Fund. There are lots of fine words about this fund, but richer nations have not put their money where their mouths are. It was supposed to be raising US$100 billion a year by 2020, but countries have so far put in just over US$10 billion in total (and that includes US$3 billion from the US, whose status is now threatened by US president, Donald Trump).

This is hopelessly inadequate in the face of the need to both finance zero-carbon development in developing countries and help those already facing 'loss and damage' from climate change. New and substantial cheques and means to simulate private financing of low-carbon development are needed.

4. Clarify the rules

Parties could agree on certain rules a year ahead of schedule. Last year, at COP22 in Marrakech, it was decided those rules that had been left vague needed to be agreed on by 2018, in order to help the first stocktake of progress in implementing the agreement.

These things tend to take a long time. Take the example of the market mechanism, for instance (article 6 of the agreement). After they were introduced in the Kyoto protocol of 1997 it took a further four years for everyone to agree on their operational rules.

This is all too slow. Now we have those earlier models to draw on, quicker progress would be a sign they are getting on with things.

5. Fantasy technologies are exposed as delusions

Parties could explicitly accept that 'negative emissions' technologies are no substitute for aiming for zero emissions.

The idea of 'net-zero' emissions - and many of the IP-CC's scenarios – increasingly rely on weird and wonderful technologies to take carbon out of the atmosphere. The latest of these is Bioenergy with Carbon Capture and Storage: you grow plants, which absorb CO₂, then burn them in power stations to generate electricity, capture the emitted carbon and store it underground. The trouble is, no-one knows if it can really work – but, at the same time, many are using this as a sort of magical escape clause to avoid the end of fossil fuels (see 1 above). A recognition that this is wishful thinking would be useful.

All five of the above are pretty unlikely. The chances are that negotiations will continue along the path of nothing happening until the last minute (if then).

But here's one that will almost certainly happen, but will be largely meaningless. The Climate Action Leadership Network, already announced at the UN Climate week in September will be fully launched, as the latest in a set of such efforts to keep up the semblance of momentum in the negotiations.

Meanwhile, renewable energy technology will drop in price independently of all the fine words, and atmospheric concentrations of carbon dioxide will continue to grow.

Opting out of scripture gives ethics a chance dore, volunteers descended on the first Primary Ethics conference on October 28.

Primary Ethics is a not-forprofit organisation that offers free training and curriculum to community members to deliver weekly ethics classes to children at public primary schools across NSW.

Primary Ethics say that ethics classes are held at the same time as scripture and non-scripture, and give children from kindy to year six the opportunity to develop thinking, reasoning and dethem in all aspects of their life.

'Developing an ethics program at your local school is a simple way to make a big difference in your community, said Margaret Crowther, who teaches an ethics class at Canowindra Public School in the Central West.

Ms Crowther works as a farmer in the small town, running organic grazing and permaculture businesses. She also coordinates the local Community Garden.

'The ethics program definitely helps children (who

From Byron Bay to Bungen- cision-making skills to help will soon become adults) develop more practical thinking and discussion skills for our changing world.'

> Keynote speaker and ethicist Dr Simon Longstaff spoke about the importance of children developing ethical decision-making skills to meet the increasing challenges and pressures that young people face today. He also noted that school ethics classes 'are effectively about

Byron Shire Council is reviewing the time limits of the pay parking area in Byron Bay. As part of the review of pay parking in Byron Bay, Council has identified a number of possible changes to time limits to bring the pay parking in line with the Byron Bay master plan and to better manage the parking throughout the town centre.

The proposed changes are on exhibition until 15 November 2017 and are available on Council's website at www.byron.nsw.gov.au/public-exhibition. Council is requesting the community to complete an online survey at www.yoursaybyronshire.com.au.

Can you ride a bucking bronco? Never tried? Think you can last longer than anyone else on the mechanical bull? Well now you have the chance to demonstrate what an amazing cowgirl or cowboy you really are. The Professionals Inc Mark Cochrane Real Estate mechanical bull competition will be near the Main Stage from 5pm till 8pm on Saturday afternoon. There will be great cash prizes for the best three times before

It's show time!

That's right, the 110th annual Mullumbimby show is here again and there is something for everyone to enjoy, enter or watch over the two fun-filled days on offer on Saturday 11 and Sunday 12 November.

the huge fireworks spectacular at 8pm.

The Show brings together the whole community. You can check out the sheep shearing, join in the Mullumbimby Pony Club sporting events or enter your cup cakes, jams or your latest Christmas decoration into one of the many competitions that are happening at the Pavilion.

If your talent is something you like to show off on stage then the talent show is for you, while those who prefer to show off their animals can enter their poultry, cattle and horses into a range of competitions. However, if you are just looking for a bit of fun and a laugh you can pop your erstwhile pets in the pet show on Sunday.

Kids can enjoy the reptile demonstrations and animal petting zoo, apparently a favourite with many of the younger showgirls and showboys. Roving entertainers and stilt walkers as well as fabulous Spaghetti Circus performances and live music on both days will keep everyone entertained.

Excitement is building in anticipation of the working dogs demonstrations on Sunday that will be a new highlight of the weekend. Those with more of an eye for a delicious pie you can celebrate the return of

$1,000+ in prizes

Do you enjoy getting involved in a few fun team activities and having a laugh? There are three age groups 5–11, 12–17 and over 18s that can get together in teams of four and find out what silly and ridiculous things you will be asked to do to win more than $1,000 in cash and vouchers from local businesses including Spaghetti Circus.

'No special talents required, just a sense of humour and a team of four and it is free to enter,' said show Secretary Tanja Branson. 'If you don't have a team of four that is no problem. Just show up and you can make one on the day.'

Rural Youth Ambassadors

For the first time boys have been allowed to enter the Showgirl competition which has been renamed the Rural Youth Ambassador competition.

The youth ambassadors have already had judging at the Mullumbimby Ex-Services Club, a combination of private judging and being asked questions during the Mullumbimby Agricultural show dinner in front of a large audience.

You can now get to see them shine, both boys and girls, at the official show opening on Saturday 1.15–2pm on the Main Stage.

Farmers Market traffic changes

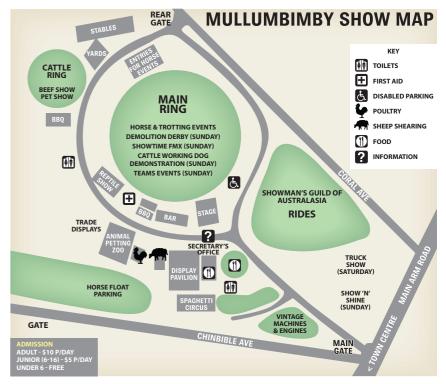

Please note that Friday 10
November there will be changes to traffic and parking for Farmers Markets patrons. There is no foot or vehicle access via the Coral movements and biosecurity. All farmers market patrons must access via Chinbible Avenue gate. We apologise for any inconvenience.

Stunt riders

FMX Freestyle MotoX stunt riders will be flying high demonstrating their crazy skills while doing mid-air acrobatics with flying motorbikes during two shows on Sunday — 1.30pm & 3.30pm. If you aren't too scared to watch them now is your chance to check out their wild antics.

Take the bus

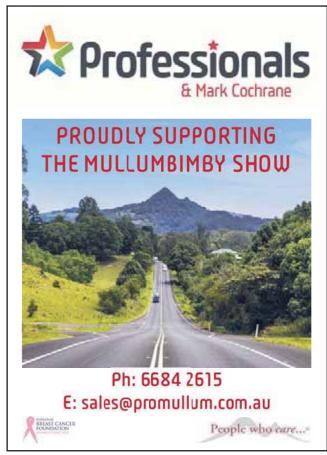

A community bus service will run on Saturday. It will be doing pick ups from 9am at central places around Mullumbimby and Main Arm. See the Mullum show Facebook page

Eden's new landing

By Vivienne Pearson

What do you do when you can't get to the Mullum Farmers Market but want locally grown and created produce? You go to Eden.

Eden's Landing has been a staple of fruit, vegetables and produce since the late 1990s. Since changing hands three months ago, the shop has been given a new lease of life whilst they have not only kept true to the philosophy of quality local produce, but have actually increased their commitment.

New owners, Amir and Ricky Zikhron, have opened up the store, creating an uncluttered and delightful shopping experience. The produce takes centre stage, beautifully complementing the wooden floors and colourful paintings.

Amir has come to his new role with knowledge of the store through being a supplier! As the founder of Baraka Dips, Amir supplied his product to Eden's Landing under previous owners and he has now come full circle by stocking the brand he started.

This is reflective of his commitment to local produce – with far more stocked than can be named here. 'If someone comes to me with a locally manufactured product, it's already an 80% yes,' he says, emphasizing that the other 20% of the decision is informed by the quality of the product and whether it meets customer

This philosophy extends fully to Eden's Landing fruit and vegetable selection. 'I use the same suppliers as I do for the Farmers Market, with matched pricing,' says Amir. The selection is broader with an additional emphasis being placed on unusual ingredients, like Thai eggplants and yams. All produce is Australian-grown unless labelled otherwise and Amir is open to hearing from new suppliers.

Another highlight of the store is the delicatessen, one of the only non-supermarket delis in the region. 'I'm a big fan of delis!,' says Amir, who has a chef background. All deli goods are sliced to order and there are some unique items that Amir has looked far and wide for, like a Wagyu beef salami and a smoked goat cheese

Half of the deli is dedicated to meals, salads and snacks, all made on site, like goat's cheese and prosciutto frittata. Freshly squeezed juices are available and new on offer is vegan and refined sugar-free icecream.

A small selection of dry goods, food containers and cleaning products – all fitting with the locally made philosophy – complete the range. 'We are almost a one-stop shop,' says Amir. Customers are loving the refreshed Eden's Landing. Says Vicki Goodhand, who has worked in the store for nearly two decades: 'Our customers just love the whole vibe. Many have been loyal through the change, some have returned and we are seeing many new faces too.'

Pop your face into Eden's Landing to find a great range of fresh local food for you and your kitchen.

Eden's Landing. Shop 4, 97 Stuart Street, Mullumbimby Ph: 6684 1007. Open 8am-6pm Mon-Sat. Also at Mullumbimby Farmers Market, Friday mornings.

More luscious dining music

By Vivienne Pearson

After enjoying classical Indian music at Billi's Indian recently, I enjoyed another musical-dining evening at Luscious Foods.

Luscious is one of Byron's best-kept eating secrets. Hidden even within the bounds of the Arts & Industry Estate – every time I go there I need to stop and check my map – Luscious is a little oasis offering awardwinning authentic Israeli and other Middle-Eastern food.

Normally a day-time venue, Friday nights see it transformed into a dinner and music venue. 'We offer table service in a beautiful setting. It is cosy and the music is not too loud,' says owner, Zohar Flantz.

The night I went, the music was provided by Tarshito ('He's famous enough to only have one name,' I was told by a friend!) on guitar and Paul Kimmel on flute. 'We play together often,' says Tarshito of the duo. 'I also play a lot of kirtan, sound journeys and music for dance,' says Tarshito, who has a recording studio in the hills behind Mullumbimby and over 50 CDs of his music.

Paul Kimmel is a flute teacher in addition to being a classically-trained flautist. He demonstrated his mastery of not only a golden 'regular' flute but a bansuri (Indian bamboo) flute and bass flute, a highly resonant instrument that is so large that it has a 180-degree bend). The overall sound of the duo was atmospheric and chilled.

The regular Luscious menu transports me instantly to my travels in the Middle East, with lamb koftas and falafel made just the way I remember them. An unexpected delight was Zohar's 'Magic Mushrooms', a luscious dish of mushrooms sautéed in turmeric, caramelized onion and spices.

Friday nights see the addition to the menu of a special dish. On the night I went, it was Malabar Prawns, uniquely created by Friday night chef Bruno Branco Assuncāo, using herbs and seeds from his own garden.

Next time, I'll leave room for a wood-fired pizza (I've got my eye on the lamb pide option, complete with mint and feta) and a desert

Paul Kimmel and Tarshito at Luscious Foods – credit Maria Patricia Fair.

(I'd have to decide between the traditional Turkish Malabie, a milk-dessert with rose water, or the Sphinge, a hot cinnamon Moroccan doughnut).

Friday nights give those who can't usually make it to the Arts&Industry Estate during the working week (they are normally open Mon-Fri 7.30-3) a chance to enjoy Luscious' food with some ambient music a complete bonus.

Sri Lanka – and a night of firsts

Sri Lanka is reemerging as one of the world's great travel destinations. With superb food, surf, fascinating history, Buddhist culture, wildlife, scenery and beaches Sri Lanka has all the ingredients for an unforgettable holiday.

Join Michael Murray, plus Richard Everist and Lucrezia Migliore from Around The Sun, for an informal opportunity to learn about travel in Sri Lanka, and the 'Very Best of Sri Lanka' tour Michael will lead in June 2018.

Michael loves Sri Lanka and has visited many times for holidays, business ventures, a film project and post-tsunami aid work. Around The Sun organises small group tours to interesting places around the world.

Michael Murray will lead a trip to Sri Lanka

Meet at the Travel Room, William St Kitchen & Bar, Lennox Head, at 6 pm, Thursday 16 November, for photos and information, an informal chat plus questions and answers, for 30 or 40 minutes.

After that you can stay on to help celebrate a night of 'firsts': Michael's first 'Very Best of Sri Lanka' tour; Around the Sun's first travel talk at the Travel Room in the William St Kitchen & Bar; and the first night of William St's brand new dinner menu!

Bookings are essential.

The Empire and Made in Mullum

Fun celebration this Friday

This Friday night 10 November from 6pm one of Mullum's oldest cafes will be young again as The Empire's new management put on a bit of an 'opening night' celebration, with, gasp, free beer.

Yes, it's still safe to bring the young ones to come and eat burgers, and yes, you do have to eat a meal in order to get a free beer, but it's certainly a good opportunity to put event beer sponsors Stone & Wood to the test.

Much has changed in Mullumbimby since 'oyster saloons' were all the rage, or since The Empire cinema was adjacent to the café. For example, DJ Crucial D will be on hand to play a few tunes on the nights.

However, there is still a very good spirit to Mullumbimby, it seems like a 'real'

On the same night, right next door to The Empire, the artisans from the 'Made in Mullum' gift shop will also be open (celebrating six years in business), giving you a good opportunity to do some early Christmas shopping from their range.

'Made in Mullum' has a lot of handmade and funky things: clothes, wooden carvings, clay Christmas decorations, jewellery, artworks, and some very cool hats and clothing from fourfeathersau. Keep it unique!

Bruns Eco Village: Security of tenure outside the competitive housing market

The dominant worldview in Australia is the success = ownership model. Bruns Eco Village aims to challenge this view by presenting a feasible platform for community living while providing the security of tenure that ownership brings.

We have developed an innovative Alternative Ownership Model where you can rent and invest simultaneously. This model will remove village homes from the speculative real estate market. Long-term leases will allow you similar rights as ownership on the use of your home.

If you are one of the many people who are disillusioned with isolated modern living and are looking for an interdependent community lifestyle that respects the natural world, then Bruns Eco Village may be for you.

Bruns Eco Village is open to all and is a demonstration of how integrated, inclusive community living can be.

We are inviting registrations for our weeklong Village Development Program (VDP) in February 2018 – a unique workshop covering the richest topics related to creating and living in community.

Come along to our information session to find out more.

Local Land Services Ready to Help

Local Land Services is ready to help land owners across the North Coast understand and utilise the new opportunities that became available on August 25 under the Land Management and Biodiversity Conservation Act.

The NSW government has funded Local Land Services to get extra resources and staff to deliver this new service and make it as simple as possible for landholders.

'Our staff are ready to work with landholders across the North Coast. We want to make it easier for landholders. We can listen to your goals and ideas, and work with you to help determine how the system can support your farm plan and business needs,' commented Kristian Holz, Group Director Sustainable Land Management, LLS.

The new approach strives to deliver triple bottom line outcomes for landowners by:

 Providing certainty and long-term planning solutions that deliver balanced growth and value environmental assets

- Supporting landowners with advice, new tools and products to make the right choice for their farm system
- Creating more land use options through flexible codes and payments for private land conservation.

The newly created Sustainable Land Management team at Local Land Services are available to help landholders with the new system.

They can provide tailored advice on applying the new land management code of practice, accessing incentives for protecting native vegetation and where required navigating approvals for clearing or development.

'The new framework will provide a better system than what is currently available. It will increase flexibility for farmers and will provide better environmental outcomes across NSW,' said Mr Holz.

Farmers are uniquely placed to support environmental outcomes for the broader community, themselves and future generations.

Local Land Services will hold an information session in Lismore on 14 November at the Lismore Workers Club, focusing on the new framework and its benefits to landholders.

Artist in Focus Sabine Brosche

Sabine Brosche is a nature lover and artist with a passion for reclaimed materials and found objects.

She creates new work by reusing and recycling materials such as discarded paper old books, packaging and cardboard – demonstrating her interest in recycling and making something from 'almost nothing'.

She has been part of four group exhibitions this year and the current show 'Chandeliers & Other Ocean Ornaments' at Art Piece Gallery in Mullumbimby is inspired by the ocean and its mysteries.

'The Byron Shire has such a diverse and rich variety of artists, and so much opportunity for collaboration, networking and inspiring each other Liust love that.'

Study Visual Arts in 2018

Byron Community College offers the nationally accredited Certificate III and IV in Visual Arts in 2018. Held at the College's Mullumbimby campus, the courses guide students to explore and develop their artistic abilities through a combination of theoretic and practical learning. Head tutor Virginia Reid is supported by guest tutors such as Maria Fernando Cardoza and Hany Armanious.

Courses are Austudy approved and with a high standard of student support, the college is able to accommodate a variety of specialised learning needs.

Come along and check out the 2017 end of year exhibition on Friday December 1st from 5pm – 7pm in the Laneway studio, Riley Lane, Mullumbimby.

Enrolments are now open with great early Bird fee reductions available until December 20th.

Head to www.byroncollege.org.au for information or call 6684 3374.

Lone Goat Gallery Call for Applications 2018

Lone Goat Gallery invites exhibition proposals from artists, designers, curators, community and cultural groups for their 2018 Calendar. The gallery welcomes applications that display innovative ideas and approaches to contemporary arts practice.

The gallery program features exhibitions of four-week duration.

Applications close 31 January 2018.

Head to www.lonegoatgallery.com for more details.

Opening Friday 10 November is GOAT SHOW, featuring 19 artists who have exhibited at Lone Goat over the past 12 months, or will be in coming months.

GOAT SHOW will be a celebration of the diversity of artists and community that Lone Goat is proud to be a part of, and runs from 10-29 November.

All welcome at the opening on Friday 10 November, 6-8pm. www.lonegoatgallery.com

BSA Afternoon Art Club & Project Space Exhibitions

Afternoon Art Club has begun at BSA but there are still places available for teens (13–15 years) interested in developing their arts practice. To see what BSA long course students have been working on don't miss the third-year group exhibition, Front Up, which opens 17 November and NINE, featuring the work of second-year BSA students, opening 1 December.

Helen Garner Celebrates 50 years of Writing in Byron Bay

Byron Writers Festival is delighted to present a special evening with one of Australia's greatest writers and long-time Festival favourite, Helen Garner, appearing in conversation with Matthew Condon at Byron Theatre on Wednesday 6 December.

In her first appearance in Byron Bay since 2004, this much-loved literary star will share an intimate retrospective of her writing life, spanning 50 years of work – from her Australian classic Monkey Grip, to the brilliant literary true crime book This House of Grief.

To coincide with the event, Garner will be marking her 75th birthday with the release of two stunning hardback editions of her recent collected works, True Stories and Stories.

Be sure to get in quick and secure your seats for this momentous occasion. Tickets on sale at byronwritersfestival.com/whats-on or call 6685 5115.

Potters of Mafeking Road Annual Open Studio and Pre-Christmas Sale

The verdant rainforest in the far west of the Shire, Mafeking Road, is a site not only of wondrous vegetation and wildlife but also home to two of the Shire's most notable potters: Anna-Marie Wallace and Suvira McDonald. As clay wizards, both use eccentric firing methods and produce unique and original work including oodles of homewares, garden sculpture and wall-mounted art works.

This coming weekend they are both opening their studios for their annual pre-Christmas sale. Some people may have already made a visit during the August Mud Trail, this time it is just the two who have recently fired up a storm of new work ready for wrapping as yuletide gifts.

The studios are open 10am-4pm both days. 230 & 300 Mafeking Rd, Goonengary

Byron Bay Seventh-day Adventist Church is Hosting a Free Concert on Saturday 11th

This Saturday, award-winning Christian artist Melissa Otto. will share her unique musical talents, and her songs and stories are guaranteed to inspire and uplift you.

Melissa is a warm, easygoing mum of two who has a long history of performing and recording. Growing up performing and touring with her family, she released her first EP at the age of 20, before going on to release three full albums (Opened, Blue Sky and The Journey Home). Her organic and refreshing style earned her the award for best Christian artist at the Music Oz Awards in 2010. She has travelled extensively with her music, including tours to USA, Europe, Hong Kong, Singapore and most recently Brazil.

Her music has captured listeners around the world with her beautiful melodies, deeply personal lyrics and soothing voice. She is passionate about using the gift of music she has been given to bring people hope and comfort in God's character. This talented singer-songwriter is currently touring New South Wales on a Songs of Ascent concert tour. The Byron Bay concert will be just over an hour long, and refreshments will be offered afterwards.

Date: 11 November 2017 • Time: 7 - 8pm Address: 97 Jonson Street, Byron Bay

Gekko Arthouse

You will find international artist Sharon Tudor Smith's artwork hanging on the walls of both her shops in Ballina.

Gekko Arthouse (Fashion | Art | Homewares) is located at 18–20 Cherry St, and also at Shop 44 Ballina Fair Shopping Centre.

Sharon is often found in her studio in Knockrow throwing paint and making marks on large canvases, sometimes for specifically commissioned artworks and sometimes just creating another fantastic piece.

Visit Sharon on Facebook or Instagram 'Art by Sharon Tudor Smith' or the website at www.gekkoarthouse.com.au.

BYRON BAY GUITAR FESTIVAL

This weekend sees some of Australia's best guitarists come to the Byron Bay Brewery for the inaugural Byron Bay Guitar Festival. Conceived and created by Byron Music's Nick Sergi, the festival presents 43 performances on two stages featuring Kevin Borich, Phil Emmanuel, Jeff Lang, Fiona Boyes, Paul George, and Steve Edmonds and Gold Coast-based guitar legend Louie Shelton. Playing alongside them will be a huge list of local legends including Jim Kelly, Greg Lyon and the Hip Operation, Fergo & The Burden and Azo Bell.

One of the must see acts is Benny Walker, also announced for Bluesfest next year.

A Yorta Yorta Man from Echuca, Benny Walker is the real deal and definitely a star in the making. His killer voice and epic tales are mixed with a deep groove and passion for the land.

For Benny his love affair with the guitar started when he was a kid.

'I picked up the guitar at the age of ten. My dad and my granddad were guitar players. It was always around. I was learning piano from 8. Once Dad showed me how to play I was off. I had been playing the piano so the guitar took over. I have gone back to the piano now.

The two instruments provide two key writing voices for Walker who says, 'Its a really different approach. On the guitar you instinctually go for places that are comfortable. The piano is laid out so differently which is not familiar so I am more unpredicable in what I am doing. It inspires different melodies. The piano inspires one thing, the guitar another.'

Walker has a vocal quality that stops you in your tracks. Interestingly his voice developed alongside his playing. He wasn't handed a guitar because of his voice. Maybe it was the luck of the draw. Not everyone who learns guitar as a kid ends up with a voice like Walker's.

'I think my voice kind of developed, I was so young,' says Walker. 'You go through your voice breaking, and there were a few horrible years of attempted singing, and it wasn't until high school when I started writing and singing a little and my voice developed with the guitar - you pick things you like and imitate. I used to listen to Chuck Berry and I was into old rock'n'roll and blues. The first song I learnt was Pipeline by Dick Dale. I am not sure where it came from but I loved a lot of older stuff as far as singer/ songwriters like Neil Young and James Taylor. I also appreciate more contemporary guys like Ryan Adams and John Mayer, guys who play and sing and write great songs.'

When it comes to songwriting for Walker it's the first line that dictates a song. 'I have become more and more critical of my writing and hopefully that is starting to show. It's like a book writer who goes back and re-reads and adjusts and edits. I try and be more concise. You have to be.'

When it comes to songwriting there's an unguarded rawness that shines through. Oh No You Don't tells the story of his struggle with dark times.

'I wrote my album Through the Forest when I was having a tough time, it was a darkish album, and that got me through that and later I started writing some songs for the next record, some blues rocks, and I brought them home and listened to them and picked up the acoustic guitar and walked it back to the home studio in my house and started playing the three chords to Oh No You Don't. I really quickly realised I was reflecting on that period of my life, so it was about knowing how to deal with those feelings, and when I was well and in the clear, or through the worst of it and on an up and that song came along, it's quite empowering."

'When it came out I had people stopping me in the street and messages about how I had connected with them and I remember how it felt to be like that and it gives someone a feeling they are not alone. People say music can heal, and you can take it as you like, I think it's a good example of how you can connect with complete strangers.'

BUCK DEAN AND THE GREEN LIPS AT THE HOTEL GREAT NORTHERN ON FRIDAY

Buck Dean and The Green Lips. Crazy name, rocking show. They're the Sunshine Coast born and bred lads ripping out some classic original rock! Emerging in 2015, they found their trademark rock sound and stuck to it. Buck Dean and the Green Lips have gone from strength to strength over the last two years. The band has enjoyed performing multiple events including, Mitchell Creek Rock'n'Blues Fest 2015, 2016, Big Pineapple 2016, 2017, Sea & Sound Festival Mooloolaba 2016 and several smaller but just as much fun events/festivals.

Multiple amazing sell out shows at their favourite local venue the Solbar has seen the band solidify a strong local following. The band has recently completed their third EP with Rock Royalty Jeff Lovejoy and have partnered with Firestarter music Adam Weston from Birds of Tokyo promo Label for its release in early December accompanied by a state by state tour in early 2018.

Buck Dean and The Green Lips play the Hotel Great Northern on Friday at 8.30pm.

I can't stand large groups of women in hats. They're scary. It's why I loathe Melbourne Cup. You put a hat on a woman and give her a glass of champagne and you've unleashed an evil more terrifying than the beast from 20,000 fathoms. I don't get the point of Melbourne Cup hats except to make drunk chicks look stupid. And from experience I can tell you, when we're drunk we don't need help to look stupid. It comes naturally. Stupid is easy when you're pissed. The hats are just obnoxious. I mean, how do you even get in a taxi with that thing on your head? No one wants to be the person stuck behind the fat bitch in the big hat when the big race is on. Hats are passive aggressive. It's all LOOK AT ME LOOK AT ME! But worse are those creepy fascinator things. That's not even a hat. It's more like what happens when a proper hat has a hot date with a lawn mower. The more mangled the better. If it doesn't have weird shit sticking out of it then people know you got it from Big W. No Melbourne Cup ensemble is complete without a fascinator, or as I call it, 'Please don't Emancipate Her' on your scone. What the hell are they for? They don't keep any sun off. Or rain. Nor do they look good. Or pick up wifi. You can't keep tampons in them. Or money. Or your tips for the big race. So what's the point? I think they call them fascinators because it's fascinating that smart women willingly pin a mangled bit of feather and net to their head. Men wouldn't wear stupid shit like that on their heads. Because they've got too much self-esteem. They've got stupid shit hanging between their legs, they're not putting more on their heads. Ironically I can see the point of a fascinator on a bloke because blokes generally aren't that fascinating to start with. And a good number of them have some nasty bald spots that you could hide with said net sculpture pinned to noggin. Those hats are proof that when it comes to our feminist liberation from being decorative baubles on the patriarchal christmas tree we still have a long way to go. So what's the point of the fascinator and what is the relationship to horse racing? Maybe it makes the horses run fast. Away from the drunk women in hats is my guess. I am convinced that those hats actually lower your IQ. I've got a whole box full of them. I only have to look at them and I feel stupid. Melbourne Cup is one of the biggest days on the comedy calendar. Every year I have to stand in front of a bunch of drunk women in hats and the only way to do that is to wear a hat too. If you don't wear a stupid hat then they can't see you. It's not our fault. The hat actually makes you want to behave badly. I put the hat on and I instantly want to wear a tight uncomfortable frock, I want to paint my nails, get botox and exchange my practical handbag for a small ludicrous 'clutch'. I want to wear really really high shoes that I can't walk in. Particularly when I'm drunk. I also want to drink champagne. Not just a little bit of champagne. I want to drink a shitload of the stuff. Even better if it's pink. And when I put the hat on I can't talk in a normal voice anymore. It goes all high-pitched, with rising inflection at the end of every sentence. As soon as I put the hat on I want to talk at the same time as everyone else. About nothing. You can't wear one of those hats and talk about climate change or politics or who you think should get the next Nobel peace prize. Nope. Those hats are for talking shit. And when you put them on you have this magical ability to talk shit non-stop exactly at the same time as every other idiot in a stupid hat. Mainly about your hats. It occurred to me that is the point of the hats. Because racing is cruel. And women are known for their empathy. Smart women would boycott stupid gatherings that saw a horse whipped until the finish line for no greater good than gambling. But with the hat on we don't care. We're just happy to make it home with our pants on. OK ladies, here's the challenge. Try Melbourne Cup without a hat next year and see how much you enjoy it. Or don't. It's up to you. BTW, anyone want a hat?

ABSOLUTE CLEARY

HE'S A FUNKY MAN IN A FUNKY BAND LIVING IN THE FUNKIEST CITY ON THE PLANET

Life smiled on Jon Cleary and his crew The Absolute Monster Gentlemen, a true four-piece riot of gospel harmonies and rocking grooves. New Orleans is very much Cleary's spiritual home, it's a place he believes that doesn't exist anywhere else in the world, and his band transports that magic to stages around the globe.

'It's all about music in New Orleans', says Cleary. 'There is a culture here that is not found anywhere else in the US – it's a culture that produces a lot of music, it's linked really more to Cuba and to Haiti then it is to the rest of the US historically, and it makes the musical mix kind of African.'

New Orleans is a place where street parades just happen because music is something that can't be contained to a room or a stage.

The street parades in the old days, you never knew where they were, more often you would be driving along and there would be 300 people dancing down the road! These days it happens more frequently but it's more organised, it used to be spontaneous, now it's planned. But they are still great!'

Cleary's approach to music has always been humble.

'I have always felt the first job is to learn how the music was made and I got to play with a bunch of the old guys, I was very lucky as they are mostly all gone now, these are the guys who invented Orleans R&B. I had to learn how it is put together and delve into it, and then write new songs, and think about the arrangements, make them sound funky and then in that process it becomes yours, it's fed by all the tradition, but at the same time you try and be individual and to make it yours.

'That's what I am doing right now, there is an infinite number of ways – for me when you have the idea it almost comes in my imagination fully done. I can hear what it sounds like – it's like listening to an album that hasn't been done yet and the challenge is to retain that and not lose it, just one track by one track.'

Cleary is currently in post-production on his upcoming album. 'I worked on all the songs, did the arrangements, recorded everything myself, chose some good musicians, played them the tunes with all the parts and then the idea is they take it and make it better, but I am careful that I sometimes use stuff from the early sessions. In recording you don't want to lose the important part of the song, the hook comes like a finished record, the challenge is to get it!'

Cleary is truly a channel for the music, perhaps that is part of the excitement when he takes the stage. Music just flows for this bloke. Even in the air.

'One of the songs came to me on an airplane! Songs come unbidden, the whole first chorus. Songs get written in all sorts of different ways, the best way is to come through inspiration, if you are lucky to have those moments, so I am playing a lot of music, a lot of piano, and listening. There is always a cloud of ideas you can draw on, some of these ideas for the last record started ten years ago, there is one on the new album from 30 years ago!'

pay tribute to Fiona Porteous at the Rails this Saturday. This is a musical tribute to the No.1 fan of the bands that her Scottish hubby Alan Park played keyboards in. The bands playing on the night are The Feramones (Rails virgins), Pete C & the Soul Shakers (regulars) and EPIC (also Rails virgins) whenever these bands were playing Fiona would be on the dance floor having a ball. All of the bands playing are donating their fees to the Melanoma Research Foundation as a mark of love and respect for Fiona and help to find a cure. The Rails is also contributing with many thanks to Tom Mooney who was also a dear friend of Fiona's.

Sadly on 17 July 2017 Fiona died from melanoma, so this gig will raise some dollars towards research. Sadly Fiona was diagnosed and gone within two months and her friends and family are still in grief. Fiona's love of music is reflected in the story of how she met Alan in 1996 when he was musical director for Sir Cliff Richard (for 26 years) and she was Sir Cliff's (and Olivia Newton-John's) wardrobe mistress. So, come on down to the Rails and celebrate the music Fiona loved to dance the night away. There will be some very special guests coming along to play on the night but my lips are sealed! From 6pm.

THE DE-TOUR OF TIM ROGERS

After a big year of books, records, tours and theatre, these shows are a summing up, a wrapping up, and an all-round celebration of a transformative year for Tim Rogers where literature, music, and theatrics all came together.

Rogers brings his De-Touring show to Byron, featuring songs both old and new, highlighting those from Tim's latest album An Actor Repairs, witty tales from his first book Detours, and vintage Tim Rogers anecdotes from his many and varied other projects throughout the year. For all shows Tim will be bringing along his friend Hanny J, who is a dynamite songwriter and performer he met when she was playing bass for his heroes Clowns.

His first book Detours launched this September to critical acclaim, and it's no wonder. Rogers is reflective, insightful, well read, empathetic and self-deprecatory. He's taken life by the balls. He's had mainstream success and he's made mistakes. All the ingredients necessary for a cracking memoir. I had never interviewed Rogers, nor met him. I'd heard stories. Rogers's stories are a bit legendary and no doubt like Chinese whispers they have gained momentum over time. I hadn't expected to be as impressed as I was by Rogers. But he is a very impressive man. Singer, writer and actor, Rogers is truly a renaissance man. Although I don't think you'll be seeing him on Dancing with the Stars.

So what about the book?

'I liked the memoir form', says Rogers. 'I don't particularly like auto biography - being a musician I had read a lot of autobiographies by musicians and they had a lot to prove or scores to settle - that their behaviour is better or worse, or their genius is unrecognised, and there is the name dropping element.

'Donald Fagen, the Steely Dan singer and songwriter, wrote a diary of a tour he did called Eminent Hipsters, his perspective of being a much-heralded songwriter and his perspective on humanity, and he would only refer to the past, and with memoir.

You can be in the middle of the tale but the bigger story lies elsewhere, and it doesn't need to be talked about, it might read as a stored somewhere subconsciously. I can be writing a piece and word play and references come to me in a flash, maybe it was something I read years ago and it returned."

Rogers reflects on the contemporary music industry and the approach of new musicians compared to his anarchic start. 'I find musicians these days to be very alert to the need to be professional about it. When I started out it was like hitching to a pirate ship.

His LP An Actor Repairs started as a monologue. 'I was asked to prepare for a monologue - and I was out of my depth. I worked away at it and being more and more in theatre and acting is intriguing and baffling and frustrating and what it does to people and I was drinking with a few older actors at the time. In the end I dropped the ball and went back to the album.'

Reflecting on his current tour Rogers says: 'Shows can turn into stand up comedy routines, because of audience attention spans, and there is the opportunity to test that, I forget how wonderful music is, and this year has been books and theatre and I really want to get out and play songs.'

'I don't know if it's the role of art to make people a little bit uncomfortable - if you are trying you can make people feel pretentious. I am not sure. Sometimes I am told that my honesty and songs makes people uncomfortable – maybe I have been touched in some way, it's uncomfortable for me to write without that, to write the way your poor little adult brain is thinking.

'Of course the riskiest thing any artist can do at the moment is approaching empathy and intelligence and intelligence that begins with empathy.

Rogers is not interested in writing or performing what he calls a 'powerpoint to popularity'.

There are rules about writing songs you can employ to make a song more successful. I didn't get that book out from the library, but to do something that is more opaque or impressionistic won't get you the loudest applause. As musicians, that's our duty - to not condescend to people.'

It's clear that Tim Rogers has found his voice, on stage and off.

'I was trying so hard 20 years ago and so conscious of opinions of me, and I didn't have a voice at all, and it's only been in the last couple of years I have really found it and hearing that voice come through and with the proliferation of opinion and comment, to retreat from that and to swim in my own pool of crapulence and not engage in public opinion so much, then I can hear myself think – I can make a completely unique contribution that is worthwhile, and think it's something of a value, and just not feel like I are competing for people's attention all the time, whether it's writing prose or music or trying to impress the ghosts I admire.'

BRADBURY IN

David Bradbury's latest film America and Me is having its local and World Premiere at the Old Drill Hall in Mullumbimby on Wednesday 8 November at 7pm. America and Me documents the filmmaker's observations over three months in the US during the lead up to the shock election of Donald Trump. A one-man band and always travelling with his camera, David Bradbury was easily able to slip into gear and start filming while on tour of his antimilitarism documentary War on Trial.

Eight US cities later he chronicled what was happening on the streets of America; 40 years after Ronald Reagan introduced the economic theories of Milton Friedman and the infamous Chicago Boys to the world.

America's failed wars to maintain Empire, gets down in the gutter with the homeless to find out what life is like on the streets, speaks to a nun who was violated by the military junta in Guatemala under the directions of a CIA operative, goes to the US/Mexican border where Trump plans to build the Wall, visits the rust belt of middle America where factories are closed and people are hurting... and ends up at the Standing Rock protest camp for Election Day.

These vignettes give context to his critique of the American penchant for Empire, using telling moments from his earlier films shot on the edge of the American colossus - Nicaragua No Pasaran, Chile Hasta Cuando?, Frontline, South of Set at the glorious Nimbin Town the Border and Public Enemy Number One.

> Hosted by Kerry O'Brien and presented by the Frontline Film Foundation this is a fundraiser to take the film back to the US. $20

SPRING IS IN THE AIR; AND HULA DANCERS ARE TRAINING TO THE GLORIOUS MUSIC OF POLYNESIA - IN PREPARATION FOR THIS UPCOMING LUAU.

This Sunday the community is invited to the cosy little St Martin's Hall in Mullumbimby to experience No Ke Aloha O Ka Hula – Luau, which translates to For the Love of Hula – Polynesian Show and Vegetarian Hawaiian Feast. Hula dancers Anna Carbonell and Gisela Conechado spoke with The Echo about what's in store.

What is the significance of a luau? What happens at a luau?

The sharing of food is a universal way of celebrating. In Hawaii the feasting at a luau is combined with music and dance. The word Luau comes from the Hawaiian word for the leaf of the taro plant which when cooked is somewhat comparable to spinach.

What happens at a luau?

In a traditional luau in Hawaii, attendees are greeted with fresh leis and 'Aloha'. They are then directed to their seats and are invited to partake in a buffet-style feast consisting of poi (staple Polynesian food made from the corm of the taro plant), dried fish, kalua pork cooked in the traditional Hawaiian imu (underground oven), lomi lomi salmon, huli huli chicken, sweet potatoes, bananas, haupia pie and other sweet treats. Once seated, the dancers come out and perform the dances from Hawaii, Tahiti, Samoa, Cook Islands and New Zealand. The guests are even invited to learn how to dance the Hawaiian hula and Ori Tahiti.

How have you been preparing for this event?

We train together several times a week, choreographing, laughing and refining. We travel to Queensland for further dance study together with our Polynesian teachers. Costumes have to be made or altered and we are grateful for the assistance of talented seamstress Pauline Hibbard.

What shall we expect on the day?

No Ke Aloha O Ka Hula Luau will present a traditional-style luau except the feast will include island vegetarian meals such as taro leaves in coconut milk, roasted sweet potatoes and other savoury root vegetables, mixed vegetables in rice noodles, Hawaiian vegetable fried rice, haupia pie and stewed bananas with coconut cream. Once seated, dinner will be presented, we will be serenaded by Andrea Kirwin and followed by the dances of Hawaii and Tahiti. Hula Pili Kai dancers will perform to one of Andrea's original songs played live. They will also share another uniquely Australian hula. Nalu and Gisela will invite some to try the Hawaiian and Tahitian Hula.

A bit about the wonderful Andrea Kirwin:

Formally one of the front people from Canberra's The Andy and George Band, Andrea Kirwin has now quit her day job and is pursuing her music fully and the results are awesome. She currently plays solo and also with her backing band of handsome musos. This Fijian-Australian is one of Australia's most brilliant musicians. Andrea Kirwin's sound has been described as an earthy blend of folk, roots, reggae, blues, funk and soul.

No Ke Aloha O Ka Hula Luau – Polynesian Show and Feast. Sunday at St Martin's Hall in Mullumbimby. Doors open 4:30pm, show starts 5pm. Bookings: www.trybooking.com/ QWNQ or call 0410161747

Search for common ground...
- m VIRGO: Articulate Mercurian eloquence makes Virgos convincing advocates for whatever they're supporting or promoting this week. But if your exacting expectations aren't met, or even recognised, by others, look past bickering and criticism to what people really want. If you can oblige them, good. If not, just say so without ran-

- Υ ARIES: As this week's spring \triangle LIBRA: Your zodiac queen Venus takes this week on a depth-dive into Scorpio waters which you may have thought were under the bridge, but suddenly resurface. How unnecessary, you're probably thinking. A more helpful approach might be looking for the buried treasure and remembering shadows are the dancing partners of light.
 - SCORPIO: With Venus the partnership principle joining Sun and Jupiter, planets of energy and expansion, in your sign, relationships are under the Scorpio microscope - and scalpel. This week has your appeal and abilities peaking, but be respectful of others, superhero. Don't take people for granted, especially where money issues are concerned.
 - Mercury's megaphone in Sagittarius gives voice to your vision this week. Which strongly recommends taking advantage of exacting Saturn's last days in your sign to save yourself from Oops! conversational banana-peel moments. And advises that if demanding answers, you may not get ones you're ready to hear.
 - % CAPRICORN: This week's best suggestions? Listen. And learn. Be flexible, not stubborn. Shall I go on? Don't be over-quick to dismiss something just because you don't agree with it. Do be open to taking new concepts on board. People you least expect could be the catalysts for some significant learning curves.
 - AQUARIUS: This week's big energies see Jupiter's dive into Scorpio's depths lifting the mask off everyday communications much like using dynamite to remove cobwebs instead of a feather duster. If conversational exchanges turn challenging and confrontational on deeply felt topics like money, politics or medical options, stay calm, be kind, don't fight.
 - ℋPISCES: If some of this week's people seem stubborn, unbudgeable, set in their ways, then ask for assistance from the invisible Neptunian collective. And be willing to receive it in perhaps a surprising form and from a different direction than expected. There aren't any wrong answers: it's all in the way you interpret them.

THOR: RAGNAROK

The renovated cinema at South Tweed is now fitted out with faux leather recliner chairs. I succumbed to their lazy-boy comfort within ten minutes of this beefcake blockbuster and, before my companion prodded me, was dreaming happily of when Kiwi director Taika Waititi made films for grown-ups (Boy, Hunt For the Wilderpeople). Waititi has now graduated to the big league and, with a budget of $180 million (good luck to him) and megastars in the cast (Anthony Hopkins, Cate Blanchett, Mark Ruffalo and Benedict Cumberbatch, not to mention, from our own backyard, Chris Hemsworth), he has come up with a super-hero fantasy that will please its producers and satisfy its audience of young blokes.

For those who don't fit into the target demographic and who find it hard to stay focused on glossy drivel, despite its celeb involvement, the movie averts boredom's black hole - only just - thanks to a tongue-in-cheek approach that for a while takes your mind off the CGI excesses. Most people (including myself) are unfamiliar with Norse mythology, but it doesn't matter. The god Thor (Hemsworth) has found himself in a faraway galaxy, while his sister (Blanchett) has stitched him up back on his home planet. Or at least that is what I think was going on - it's so easy not to give a rat's when you know that whatever happens it will inevitably lead to a humungous fight that takes up the last fifteen minutes and ends with... well, you know how it ends (is it a spoiler to say that Hemsworth wins? Surely not). Waititi has made the characters more human and self-deprecating than your traditional superhero, which can't be a bad thing. The sexy, kick-ass heroine (Tessa Thompson) maintains today's trend to bogus girl power – there is a cute sarcastic piece of dialogue when Thor acknowledges and praises the advent of women in the genre - but in the end, it's just the same-old-same-old. Fab to hear Led Zeppelin's 'Immigrant Song' in the soundtrack.

THREE SUMMERS

se en

This film is as PC as you can get. It is as though writer/director Ben Elton has aimed solely to create a script that would best suck up to the holier than thou group-think of arts funding bodies in Oz. Contrary to what you might expect, however, the movie is also a buoyant, refreshing and plain-speaking boy-meets-girl love story with a terrific soundtrack and an admirable determination to not fall back (too often) on the 'quirky character' for its laughs.

Rebecca Breeds plays a feisty fiddler/singer in her father's (John Waters) folk-rock band. They are regular performers at 'Westival' (somewhere near Perth), an annual gathering of musos, buskers and punters that is meant to be seen here as a microcosm of Australian society. A handsome Irish theremin player (Robert Sheehan) arrives in the first of the three years covered and, after initially not connecting, he and Breeds are drawn to each other. But it is elsewhere that Elton wants to push his political barrow, and if he is not in the least subtle in his approach, I for one was not put out by it. Australia's hateful, racist treatment of refugees has seen our 'fair go' nation devolve to the point where we are now rightfully looked upon as a pariah state by the civilised world, so if agit-prop is the only way to shake the population from its blind-eyed apathy, then go for it Ben. The scene featuring an Afghani trio that has been released from detention for the day is genuinely moving, as is (and you won't believe it, but it's true), Michael Caton, in suit and tie, doing an indigenous emu dance. The stereotypes are all there – Kelton Pell as the blackfella demanding a treaty, Magda Szubanski as the dipsy announcer who is everyone's friend, an over-zealous security guard, a couple of do-gooders who have adopted an Afghan son... but it is the romance between Breeds and Sheehan that wins the day.

PETS

CAWI THE BYRON DOG RESCUE

Mia is a young kelpie cross who came to us with her litter of 4 puppies. She was an amazing mum to her pups and now that they've all found homes, it's Mia's turn! She is very sweet natured, learns quickly and likes to spend time with her people. She gets along with other dogs and is good with kids. If you are interested in giving Mia a loving home, please complete the Adoption Application Form available on our website. www.cawi.org.au

Puss is a little pocket rocket! She is so petite & simply adorable! Puss loves being fussed & will groom you in return to thank you for loving her. Puss gets on well with other cats but is searching for amazing humans that will give her the home she truly deserves. No cat or kitten should ever have to pass through a shelter so Puss would like to remind you to desex & microchip your pets. Please be responsible & make a real difference.

All square after tight local derby in women's youth soccer

John McKay

No one turns on a better, or closer, local derby than the Spell and the Gypsy Collective Byron Bay FC Wildcats and the Mullumbimby Brunswick Valley youth teams who drew 3–3 last Friday night.

Early on things looked dodgy for the Wildcats in the home tie of the Summer Youth League as the signature MBV hard-nosed defence, neat first touch game and lightning fast-break surged into action.

Despite some fine play from the girls from Mt Chincogan it was the Wildcats, who demonstrated that (even when under pressure) they can still be a scoring threat when Nambe Rembe bothering the ball across the Mullumbimby line to score the first goal against the run of play for Byron.

Mullum came back quickly from this early shock when their talented midfield released their speedy front-line, time and time again, to cause nightmares for the Wildcats

Byron looked the likely winner... but a missed penalty and several other missed opportunities proved costly for Byron as the gutsy Mullum team worked their way back into the contest.

The final ten minutes was all Mullumbimby as their plucky, talented and young mid-field took control and not only grabbed a goal back but were unlucky to not claim a winner!

Final score 3-3.

Women's AFL celebrates diversity in Byron Bay

The week-long AFL National Female Diversity Championships were held at Byron's Cavanbah centre last month.

The Championships included over 200 participants from Indigenous and multicultural backgrounds and provided pathways into various development programs.

Currently in its second year, the 2017 Championships will encompass the Rio Tinto AFL National U/15 Kickstart program, which has been running for five years, and the Australia Post AFL National U/15 All Nations Cup.

'With the great response to the national NAB AFL Women's competition, these championships showcase the talent of aspiring young female footballers with Indigenous and multicultural backgrounds from across the country,' AFL development manager Andrew Dillon said.

'Not only does the Championships provide players with the chance to showcase their talent and engage in a number of educations sessions, it also provides development opportunities for those in the Diversity Umpiring Academy.

Kids line up for Kingscliff triathlon

An increase in the number of junior athletes is shaping up to be a feature of the 16th staging of the Kingscliff Triathlon set for Sunday, December 3.

An expected field exceeding 1000 athletes competing in Tempta, Sprint and Olympic distances will be joined by 200 junior athletes ranging from 7 to 12 years old.

With a protected swim and a flat cycle and ride, the junior triathlon is a great opportunity for kids to have a go at triathlon, said race director Mike Crawley.

New sailors inspired on the Tweed

The Tweed Valley Sailing Club held their rescheduled 'Try Sailing Day' last weekend and were kept busy taking groups of eager new sailors out for their first taste of wind power.

Nervous looking faces stepping onto the boats were transformed into smiles when they returned.

Everyone got to steer the boat and adjust the sails themselves - learning lots of new vocabulary on the way - 'sheets', 'vangs', 'tillers', 'jibs', 'tacking' and most importanly the 'boom'.

TVSC skippers did an exellent iob

The Junior members helped out too. In particular Isaac Poulsen from Burringbar took out some of the younger new sailors on the club's X3 and did such a good job of passing on his enthusiasm for the sport that Rigby (9) and Tully (7) came in asking if they could join the club immediately and when can they go out sailing again.

Adults too got to enjoy a new experience and learn that sailing is not just an expensive elite sport, TVSC

Another win puts Byron Bay cricket on top of Coastal League

The Byron Bay second grade team has pushed itself to the top of the Coastal League table after another strong win on the weekend.

After winning the toss against Murwillumbah they batted their way to all out for Adam hit out for a good 61 runs. Matt (43) and Adam put on 78 for the third wicket after a shaky start and the tail wagged with a combination of 91 runs between them as Toby (35), Martie (31) and Brady (25) took the team past the magical 200-run mark.

In reply M'bah were all out for 128 off 26 overs. Paul D was the best of the batting side hitting 41.

Brady starred with the ball taking 3/19, followed by Martie with 3/28. Levi chipped in with two wickets and Matt and Lauchy got one each.

The win leaves the Byron side the only team in the comp with three wins from five games and they sit on 29 points, six ahead of second place Tintenbar-East Ballina.

The Tintenbar side playing at home beat Terranora who won the toss and batted.

Dave Dirou starred with the bat retiring on 101 not out.

In another game from round five Lennox Head defeated Alstonville after putting them into bat at home on Geoff Watt Oval.

The home side was bundled out for 99 off 24 overs, and were eclipsed by Lennox who got 105 without loss in 13 overs.

The Lennox side are in third place on the table with 22 points, but have a game in hand.

Alstonville also sit on 22

Along side M'Bah, the Mullumbimby Brunswick side are the only team not to have a win this season.

They are scheduled to take on Byron Bay this weekend playing at home.

18-year old claims Mullum tennis title

Teva Leibo has became the open men's singles winner at this year's Mullumbimby Tennis Club championships held on Sunday.

In a tight game he defeated Adam Clark 3-6 7-6 (10-8).

Teva started playing tennis when he was eight years old and joined the Mullumbimby club a year after that.

Teva has practised plenty of times against Adam but never played him in a proper match, he said.

'It was a close game, very close. Eight all in the tie breaker, he said. 'It's a good feeling to get the win.

In the specials men's singles Amadeus O'Connor defeated Denis Hopking 6-1

Amadeus also won the open boys singles.

Special men's doubles winners were Leko De Almeida / Trent Morgan who beat Chris Coffee/Jarel 6-1 6-0.

The mixed doubles were won by Roberta Hall/Jarel defeating Chris Coffee/Diana Rowe 6-4 6-4.

The 12-boys winner was Oliver Fernley who defeated Onyx Cheung 7–6 4–6 6–4.

Four local surfers travelled to Port Stephens to boost their ratings at the NSW Toyota Pro women's QS 6000 and the NSW Pro Men's QS 1000 events that ran in some great conditions.

Stephanie Single from Lennox Head got off to a great start with a win in the round of 96 and followed that up with a second in the round of 72 before bowing out in the round of 48 with an equal 37th place finish.

In the men's Toyota QS 1000 Kyuss King (Byron Bay) and Lennox Head's Mikey all got off to great starts in the round of 48 with McDonagh and King picking up wins, and a second to Murray.

In the round of 32 Kyuss kept up his winning run while McDonagh and Murray were eliminated in 25th and 17th place respectively.

In the round of 16 King was on the wrong side of a very close decision by the judges and placed third missing out on a quarter final berth by .07 of a point to finish in equal ninth, which ---Wildlife care organisation WIRES say they recently received a distressing phone call from two tourists visiting the Byron Bay Lighthouse, who accidentally hit and killed a female swamp wallaby. WIRES's Sharon McGrigor said the pair checked the dead wallaby's pouch and discovered an uninjured joey. WIRES is now looking after the joey, who will be released in about five months. The WIRES 24-hour hotline is 6628 1898.

Independent online news outlet Crikey asks if we have become numb to a government that has normalised chaos. One way to arm yourself against unstable and deteriorating governments is the quick and easy read, On Tyranny: Twenty Lessons from the Twentieth Century by Timothy D Snyder.

Turnbull's biggest problem of course are a lack of any internal moral compass and judgment, coupled with being trapped in a bubble full of 'yes' advisors. The dual citizenship fiasco, snubbing Aboriginal reconciliation and ignoring the unfolding crisis on Manus Island are but a few 'problems' for the member for Goldman Sachs. And that's just last week.

Are the scariest monsters of all political monsters? Young Luka Silverstone thought so, and was dressed up as Pauline Hanson from One Nation at the Brunswick Heads Primary School's big Halloween event recently. Without irony, the real Hanson popped champagne to kick off her week-long 'battler bus' tour of QLD for the upcoming state election campaign. It's Trump's world currently, and Hanson is just one clown act within it. Photo Jeff Dawson

Federal-based author Susanna Freymark is crowdfunding a new book entitled Fricken Stop Gossiping, and she is on the lookout for short stories, fiction and non-fiction as well as poems that could be sold in Federal's only shop. She says the book already contains stories by author Kate Veitch, Kate Ramsay, Lisa Walker and Mike Smee. Anyone with a story about life in the hills, a character or a moment in time can send them to susannafreymark@ gmail.com for consideration.
