Minister agrees to reserves draft plan changes

Ken Sapwell

NSW Lands Minister Tony Kelly has made a flying visit to Tweed Heads to calm growing disquiet in local Labor Party ranks and the wider community over his department's draft plan of management for the shire's crown lands.

questions from a small group upset over most of the development proposals contained in the draft and its lack of detail and clarity.

It included three representatives from the village alliance whose spokesperson, Julie Boyd, emerged from the meeting to say she was happy Mr Kelly had acknowledged their concerns and taken some steps to address them.

She said Mr Kelly agreed to a range of requests, including reopening the submission period, establishing a community liaison group and improving the level of liaison between his department and the Planning Department.

The Minister also agreed to personally read more than 70 submissions which individuals and community groups had written objecting to more than a dozen development proposals, ranging from marinas to holiday parks on prime waterfront reserves.

'He seemed interested in what we were talking about and I believe the meeting was very fruitful,' Ms Boyd said of the meeting organised by local ALP branches.

One of Mr Kelly's staff, Alex McGregor, who accompanied him on his lightning visit, said the Minister assured the meeting the draft was 'not a binding planning document but more a strategic document'.

'He acknowledges the community's concerns over the draft plan and has undertaken to receive further submissions and to establish a community liaison group,' he said.

'The group will work with the Lands Department, government agencies, the council and the broader community to explore individual proposals that might arise from the plan of management.'

Mr McGregor said any revenues raised from developing the crown land would no longer just be spent on maintaining crown reserves but would go to community and public facilities such as schools and hospitals.

Asked if the Minister would guar- and lack of supporting detail.

It was all smooth sailing for Simon Hill, Duncan Gibbs and John Richard Everett-Caldwell of the Gold Coast when they navigated the Tweed River in their sloop Ruwach during the Tweed River Festival's classic-boat regatta last weekend. antee that the money would stay in the Tweed, he said 'I don't want to give a guarantee or anything like that but it's not going to be highway robbery – there's no intention to take the money and run.

'And it's not our intention to lock the community into something they don't want'.

Mr McGregor said he was also unable to say whether the state government or the council would be the consent authority for any developments on crown land.

Ms Boyd said the community representatives at the meeting tackled the Minister over concerns about the process as well as the confusion created by the document's presentation and lack of supporting detail.

She believed closer liaison between the planning and lands departments would highlight planning and environmental restrictions facing some of the more controversial development proposals such as the two marina projects.

Mr Kelly had been told that the draft plan also raised concerns about inappropriate development, overdevelopment and the impacts on the health of the Tweed's coastal waterways.

Meanwhile, Tweed MP Geoff Provest says he still intends to attend a meeting with Mr Kelly and his department's director general, Warwick Watkins, scheduled for this week to further discuss community concerns.

The National Party MP says he is worried that some of the revenue raised from any developments on crown land will be diverted to the state's coffers to help the cash-strapped government pay for major infrastructure projects in Sydney.

'The government said that money from its new poker machine tax would be spent in the community but that hasn't happened and I suspect the same will happen with crown land revenues,' he said.

Mr Provest said the government, in a little publicised move two years ago, had also decided to divert royalties from sand extraction in the Tweed away from community projects and into their general revenue fund.

Jim prepares for the flight of his life

Madeleine Doherty

Stokers Siding's Jim Watson (pictured) is not one to do things the conventional way - and that includes taking in the sights of the Himalayas in India.

Most travellers would be content to trek, take a bus or charter a small plane to take in the majesty of the world's highest peaks. But not our Jim Watson.

For the last year Jim has been a familiar sight on the hills around Stokers Siding as he climbs to the top with a heavy pack on his back

High adventure

Then he runs as fast as possible down the hill and lifts into the air for a short distance when the wind is just right. Jim has taken to the air paragliding and is getting ready for the adventure of his life.

His preparations have been a source of entertainment for locals with the village children and the occasional cow gathering to marvel as Jim goes up and down the hill on a Sunday afternoon.

Leaving nothing to chance Jim has reduced his body weight to get better lift-off, polished his boots, checked and rechecked his gear and weighed his pack to get through the airport without excess luggage.

On weekends he also travels to Mt Tamborine in Queensland to get more practice for the flight.

Blue horizon

On November 4, Jim will be driven a kilometre upwards from the village of Bir, India and will then launch himself into the blue horizon and glide over the snow capped Himalayas within only a piece of lightweight fabric linking his soul to this life.

'I'll be climbing about 12 to 14 thousand feet up from the launch pad,' Jim said.

With the highest grade woollen thermals and an array of other woollies to fend off the freezing temperature, Jim will be soaring.

He will have the chance to paraglide for about 30 kilome-

Terri's a good Samaritan

A Tweed Heads woman moved into action after hearing about how some pensioners were doing it tough and is now handing out free bread and groceries every week.

Terri Bradley is not one to sit idly by watching people struggle.

'I heard how some pensioners were struggling and decided to do something,' Ms Bradley said.

With the help of a friend she organised for loaves of bread to be delivered from Bakers Delight at Varsity Lakes on the Gold Coast.

Once the word was out another woman donated groceries to be given away to those feeling the pinch.

The groceries include tins of meat, nuts and biscuits as well as pasta and other essentials.

Tweed's Terri Bradley is lending a helping hand to pensioners feeling the pinch by offering free bread and groceries on Wednesdays at 12.30pm at Jack Evans Boat Harbour, Tweed Heads.

Shopping centre court clash

Ken Sapwell

A developer hoping to get a jump on its rivals by becoming the first to establish a major shopping centre outside Tweed Heads is heading for a costly courtroom showdown with Tweed Council on Monday (October 27).

The court has set aside five days for an appeal by Metricon against a deemed refusal by the council for a 'substantial shopping centre' it wants to build on mind something the size of a four-hectare site on its Seabreeze residential estate near Pottsville.

The company is challenging the council's retail strategy which seeks to protect the character of its villages by limiting them to neighbourhood style centres while keeping Tweed Heads as a regional centre.

Turf war

It follows a long-running turf war among at least five big players for supermarket supremacy including the developers of a new Coles shopping centre at Casuarina Beach, Kings Beach No 2 Pty Ltd.

Kings Beach lost a bid in the Land and Environment Court 1500sqm of speciality shops council in defending the appeal on the grounds that they are 'regional competitors' and would be affected by the outcome of the case.

Pottsville business association president Tania Murdock says Metricon kept quiet about the scale of the development which she says verges on a 'regional centre' until it lodged its development application earlier this year

Ms Murdock says marketing agents conducting a doorknock campaign have indicated to residents that the centre would be comparable to the Gold Coast based company's shopping centre at Flame Tree ministrators put a final deci-Park.

'Few residents realise it will be up to three times the size of the Flame Tree Park complex in Banora Point,' said Ms Murdock, whose claim appears to disbelief from a residents' association spokesman.

Dennis Parker, the residents' association vice-president, says the location of a shopping centre had been discussed at several meetings, but if it boiled down to the choice of a large centre in the village or at Seabreeze, the association believed Seabreeze was the best location.

'The association wouldn't Flame Tree or even slightly bigger, he said, adding that he did not think it would be three times the size.

'I find that hard to believe but I can't comment further because I haven't seen the plans,' said Mr Parker, whose association has signed off on a locality plan which designates the yet-to-be developed Dunloe Park further south to be the preferred site of any large shopping centre.

Ms Murdock, a former on the coast's southern end, council candidate, has taken a broad swipe at Metricon's joint venture with the Peninsula Development group which initially wants to build a 3250sqm supermarket, earlier this month to join the and a 24-hour service station on the estate.

Retain the village

The council wants to limit Seabreeze to a neighbourhood retail centre of around 500sqm while identifying the existing village as having the potential for a full-line supermarket of up to 2500sqm.

Council planners say the village should be retained as the main commercial and retail hub, saying the concentration of retail services in one place would create a vibrant mixeduse centre and reduce shoppers' vehicle fuel bills.

But the council's former adsion on hold until the newly elected council considered the findings of a site-suitability investigation which will soon be completed.

Ms Murdock says the com-be confirmed by a reaction of pany has also failed to properly inform residents of the scope of development works and has played down its visual impacts on the landscape by comparing it to a smaller centre.

It will involve a huge amount of excavation work, a retaining wall up to 10-metres high, a 24-hour petrol station servicing haulage trucks and an obtrusive acoustic barrier along what is now a scenic route, she savs.

'New town centre'

Ms Murdock says a big shopping centre at Seabreeze would totally fracture the town and wreck its sleepy image because it would virtually amount to a new town centre.

The Pottsville businesswoman has also strongly denied what she says are untrue and defamatory suggestions circulating in the town that she's responsible for the design of the town's controversial streetscaping works and is behind a push to relocate the town's oval and village green.

'There is no suggestion by anyone that I'm aware of, including the council, to relocate the oval,' she said.

Meantime, several Seabreeze residents who spoke to The Echo said they were upset to learn that the company was pushing for such a big shopping centre when its marketing material indicated that a smaller neighbourhood-style centre was planned.

Stephen Segal, who has been involved in several courtroom stoushes with the council in a so-far unsuccessful bid to establish a regional shopping centre on his land at Chinderah, will be cheering the council from the sidelines.

Mr Segal said he did not apply to join the council in its court case because he was unaware until now that Metricon was planning anything bigger than a neighbourhood centre.

A spokesman for Metricon said he did not want to comment on the claims ahead of the case in the Land and Environment Court.

Keeping a bird's-eye watch over Tweed's ospreys

Luis Feliu

Tweed's eagle-eyed birdwatching group is using national Bird Week starting this Sunday to highlight its work monitoring and protecting one of the shire's largest and betterknown raptors, the osprey.

The theme for the week is 'Revealing Raptors' and the Eastern Osprey (Pandion cristatus), which is listed as vulnerable in NSW, is the focus of efforts by the Tweed Bird Observers (TBO) to sustain or increase its population.

TBO, which has up to 60 volunteers, is part of a local osprey breeding monitoring program which began in the early 1990s to watch nests in the Tweed and Brunswick river catchments for breeding activity and fledgling success. Other program partners 'feathering' the osprey nests are National Parks and Wildlife Service (NPWS), Country Energy and Tweed Shire Council.

TBO conservation officer Linda Brannian told The Echo there were 16 osprey nests but some have already been the two river catchments.

'This means the birds are may not necessarily have produced eggs or chicks,' Ms Brannian said.

The group has monthly outings around the Tweed Valley and weekly walks around the TBO often provides bird surveys for Landcare and private property owners and works in conjunction with the Tweed Valley Wildlife Carers.

The group also authors a bird brochure highlighting bird walks around the shire, available at all tourist information outlets, and maintains a list of bird species observed in the Tweed.

Bunnings of South Tweed Heads have created a peaceful oasis for troubled minds at Tweed Heads Hospital.

More than 20 team members from Bunnings hit the hospital last week to create a new garden for Alzheimer and dementia patients.

Tweed Heads Hospital CEO Trish Hogan, in one of her last duties at the hospital, opened the garden with the Bunnings team joining in the ceremony. Ms Hogan praised the kind thoughts and efforts of the hardware retailer, saying Alzheimer and dementia patients now had a peaceful refuge in which to relax devoid of the hospital corridors, which had been their only place to get some exercise.

Ban sparks formation of Tweed All Blacks

Luis Feliu

An author writing a book on Aboriginal rugby league history before World War II is seeking information on a team called the Tweed Heads All Blacks which formed as a result of a ban on coloured players.

Canberra writer David Huggonson provided this photo of the All Blacks to The Echo in the hope of eliciting information from surviving relatives of the players.

He said the formation of the All Blacks team highlighted the popularity of white supremacist notions that the eugenics philosophy had fostered in Australia, including the Tweed.

(The Shorter Oxford Dictionary defines eugenics as the science pertaining to the 'production of fine offspring').

According to his research, shortly before the 1930 football season, the executive of the Tweed Heads Rugby League Club prohibited coloured players from playing for the club and the ban was maintained for the 1931 season by a close vote those pictured were still in the of 17-15.

'This action led to Aboriginal and Islander communities deciding to form their own football club which they named the original participation in Rugby Tweed Heads All Blacks,' Mr Huggonson said.

Sharing nursery rhymes

Murwillumbah Public Library is running a regular six-week program called Baby Bounce and Rhyme from Friday, October 31, at 10am.

Baby Bounce is a 20-30 minute session designed to introduce your baby, and reintroduce you, to the joy of sharing the rhythm and rhyme of nursery rhymes, finger plays, poems and songs with your baby.

Each session involves singing, clapping, musical instruments, rhymes and lots of fun with your baby. All parents, grandparents, carers and their babies are invited to participate in this free program.

It is mainly designed for children aged under two, but if parents need to bring older siblings along, ask them to bring a teddy so that the older child can participate as well.

To book a child into or for further information call the library on (02) 6670 2427.

When big is not better

The outcome of next week's Land and Environment Court hearing over the proposed major shopping centre complex at the Seabreeze estate near Pottsville could have a big impact on the future shape and character of the southern Tweed Coast area.

The developers want a much larger than planned or expected shopping complex, complete with 24-hour service station, at the fast-growing estate which is already dwarfing the once sleepy village of Pottsville. (Have a look at the area on Google Earth and you'll get the picture).

Tweed Shire Council has planned sensibly ahead with a retail strategy in place for future population growth. But the company is challenging that strategy which, importantly, aims to protect the character of the shire's villages by limiting them to neighbourhood style centres while keeping Tweed Heads as a regional centre.

Metricon, as a joint developer of the proposed complex, should be satisfied with a village style complex to service its housing estate which has already made them handsome profits. The Tweed community is saying 'no' to this type of senseless overdevelopment and the company should really be thinking about giving back to the community rather than trying to take more by pushing the envelope. It wasn't that long ago that many Murwillumbah residents were upset by this company's controversial housing subdivision in their town, which was bound to affect their amenity, particularly in traffic issues, and this latest saga appears to be more of the same.

The push for a much bigger and no doubt more profitable shopping complex irrespective of residents wishes or needs defies logic. For years Pottsville residents and council have worked to create an environment that reflects the lifestyle they want, yet developers from far away eye off the potential created on the backs of locals. And it's not because the developer cares about our communities - it's all about how many dollars they can make. Have they absorbed nothing from the recent events in the US financial system? Isn't it now bleeding obvious that it's time to rein in greed and rampant consumerism and turn to more sustainable developments that complement established communities rather than exploit them.

The residents of Seabreeze made their home there, aware of the charm of nearby Pottsville village and surrounds with a low-key and laid-back coastal lifestyle the big attraction. They saw a village shopping and neighbourhood centres, community gardens, coffee shops, bakeries, parkland and the like made for a real family destination and wanted a slice of that little paradise.

If anyone wants to experience the delights of a large shopping centre they can drive 10-15 minutes to Tweed Heads South and take in the vista that comes with shopping centres - car parks and traffic. Many locals there moved away from the big cities and its fast pace and stress for the quiet coastal living which this development is set to shatter.

And where is the tourism in all this? Tourism is one of the main industries of the Tweed. It's probably safe to say that tourists don't come here to go to a shopping centre.

We sell ourselves as a holiday destination – natural iconic landscapes, seaside villages, the river and fresh produce all set in a relaxed North Coast atmosphere. Bung in a huge shopping centre and you can kiss that point of difference good bye!

the pie: Australia's version of Shiller's 'gold rush'. Unfortunately, like any gold rush in for many, they had none of history, many will have lost their life savings.

Traditionally the market was a place for speculators only, a capital-raising platform that, like any, is high risk, high yield but a place where innovation or retirement funds have been and imagination can find finance. However, the flood of nuevo investors and the subsequent boom has left the ASX a long way from its roots and its raison d'être. Listing costs on the main board are now in excess of $100,000, not to mention the expensive annual fees, which seems to have encouraged more reputation than innovation.

Naturally enough, an outraged public wants to know why the forces that caused such a maelstrom should be delivered from it, compliments of the public purse. 'Let the bastards tumble,' seems to be the prevailing sentiment. That is, of course, until people can't get their money out of the bank; a nightmare that governments everywhere are attempting to avoid. Even the Reserve Bank Governor has done a monumental backflip on the government's savings guarantee policy.

Ultimately the crisis highlights what has been the elephant in the room for some time: that western, patriarchal consumerism and capitalism in fact, destructive, unfair, unjust, opportunistic, exploitative Leading the common and elitist. Instead of a bailout maybe it's time to return to that unpretentious and pithy 70s bumper sticker sentiment, 'live simply so that others may simply live?

Why did the council's manager thrust this outrageous proposal to sell part of this busy boulevard, shown in the Tweed Heads Master Plan as a shared zone for a Bay Street weekend market? Perhaps it was to take advantage of newly appointed councillors or help council's financial stress in their newly constructed $17 million Murwillumbah car park and pool!

What he doesn't say is the southern side of Bay Street is a major exit road from Tweed Centro. behaviour has nothing to do with the massive and global ecological degradation and climatic catastrophes going on at present has enough holes in it to sink a fleet of battleships.

Only a blind fool could believe that humans bear no responsibility for this disaster. Toxic chemicals pervade our food chain and choke the earth, the oceans and the air. Who do you think puts them there? electromagnetic radiation saturates every cubic centimetre of our environment. Who do you think puts it there? Extraterrestrials? And you think none of this has any effect on the climate? Wake up!

Unfortunately, as Roman Emperor Marcus Aurelius once commented, 'The world is full of fools. Why be surprised when you meet another one?'

As a 59-year-old I feel that in my lifetime there have been enough significant changes to the climate and geomorphology within Australia to consider that there is an impact happening.

One point that was not raised by the eminent speakers was the statistical increase in population since the late 1800s when the 'Industrial Age' Santa Claus? Carcinogenic commenced and power-generated industries and machines started turning the 'wheels of progress' to what we have today. Significantly, we have not fully developed an infrastructure that will change our dependence on fossil fuels since the late 1800s.

The period of the Industrial Revolution to today has shown an incredible population jump, and because of the jump, more fossil-fuel appliances are required and greater generation of power is necessary because of this increase. More and mate-change dinosaurs offer more cars are upon our roads and somehow governments are not willing to participate in a greater responsible alternative

Now we seem to collect about climate change instead data from the ocean, air and earth with more precise information for our needs and, yes, it is of concern how our planet is coping with the added pollutants and noxious gases, including major land clearing and burn-offs that are allowing increased warming prediction upon our planet.

I for one agree with Katie Milne that 'you need to err on the side of caution'. Who cares if it is just a normal cycle of our earth 'warming/cooling' process...? I care to find new alternatives to fossil-fuel generation and appliances. It's a hot topic and it deserves to remain hot as it will reflect in history upon our generation fear which makes us cling to as to what we delivered to our a paradigm which is frankly future generations.

Researchers study whale behaviour

The importance of Byron Bay as a resting area for humpback whale mothers and their calves is the subject of a new research project under way by the Southern Cross University Whale Research Centre.

The study is being coordinated by Kathryn Brown, an Honours student in the Bachelor of Environmental Science and Management.

Kathryn said there was some evidence that Byron Bay was used by the female whales as a resting place during their southern migration.

'The Federal Government's Humpback Whale Recovery Plan has recognised the possibility that Byron Bay is a resting area. We are collecting that data so we can be certain,' she said.

additional information on the behaviour of the whales.

When you look at the northern migration the whales tend to be moving fairly quickly, but on the southern migration there's more backtracking. Rather than just a stream of whales there are more complex flows and turns,' she said. The males are competing to be closer to the females.

'The information we are collecting will assist in the development of management plans for the Cape Byron Marine Park. There are a number of threats facing whales as they swim through populated areas, so it's vital we know their behaviour patterns and what is important habitat?

The project is being conducted from September to November, with Kathryn leading a team of volunteers - mainly fellow Southern Cross University students who spend three days a week spotting the whales from the top of Cape Byron Lighthouse.

The study is being conducted with assistance from the NSW National Parks and Wildlife Service and NSW Marine Parks Authority, and is being supervised by Associate Professor Peter Harrison, the director of the Southern Cross University Whale Research Centre, and Daniel Burns, a

Survey finds Generation Y is prepared to wait for housing

A new study looking at housing affordability and Generation Y has found that young people are prepared to delay buying their first home for five years or more to ensure they can afford something that meets their expectations.

Melanie Thomas, an Honours student at Southern Cross University's School of Commerce and Management, took a group of 18 to 28-yearolds from the Gold Coast and northern NSW to two display homes and then surveyed their opinions in an in-depth study to determine attitudes towards home ownership.

'The indication is that this demographic is prepared to significantly extend the amount of time before they buy a house rather than compromise their expectations,' said Melanie.

'For example, having an area to entertain friends rated as one of the most important considerations for this demographic when buying property, and most plan to wait until they are able to afford something that meets this need, rather than settle for second best.'

As expected, the research found that rising house prices have hit the demographic hard, with the average age of first time home buyers rising.

mers, and an increasing reluctance by banks to loan adds to the strain, with many young people pointing out that even with the lowest of standards, there is very little available for what they can borrow.

But Melanie said that despite the current credit crunch, it was important to understand the needs of Generation Y.

'The evidence suggests that Generation Y will delay buying housing for some time, but not forever,' said Melanie.

'There has been very little research into young people and housing but the more that is known about the attitudes of Generation Y the better prepared investment companies, developers, banks and others can be to look after their needs when the time comes - and the better service they will receive?

Television Guide

1. Johnny Rotten fires again in The Sex Pistols (SBS, Friday 10.25pm). 2. Will Ferrell is funny in pretty much anything, but American stock car racing (Talladega Nights – the Ballad of Ricky Bobby, NBN, Friday 8.30pm) is an incomprehensible joke outside the USA. 3.We're Here to Help (Prime, Friday 9pm) is a popular New Zealand flick based on a famous case of tax bureaucracy running wild.

4. Clive James he's not, but as a talk-show host Graham Norton (ABC2, Thursday 10pm) is just as smart, and much more fun. He is preceded by the equally entertaining Myles Barlow with his Review.

Mullum Music Festival

To celebrate the launch of the Mullum Music Festival scheduled for 20-23 November in beautiful downtown Mullumbimby I have double passes to give away to shows over the weekend. Email mandypow@echo.net. au with subject header 'mullums got the moves.' Her voice is haunting. It kind of blows in like the desert wind that sweeps through Alice Springs where she lives. Mei Lai Swan is an Indie artist with a difference. For a start she's based in the Northern Territory, and secondly it's the combination of her voice with cello and violin that makes her performance so captivating.

Mei Lai has just finished up a full time job to pursue music. When we chat she is packing the car preparing for a four day road trip to Melbourne.

'I am basically homeless now,' she laughs. 'It's kind of new for me. I have been living in Alice for three years and working here, been taking breaks and touring when I have holidays. I finished my job at the end of July and now I am living out of a suitcase!'

Fiercely intelligent and blessed with a social conscience, Mei Lai has just finished up her work as a Community Development Officer with the Land Council. Now she does part time holiday programs running music workshops.

'I really love it here,' she says, 'I love the space up here. I don't tend to do urban music anyway.'

Mei Lai had a more classical introduction to the music world.

'I started playing violin at eight and was playing in orchestras as a kid, I didn't study music, I just had private lessons, and then on and off love playing the cello. I write on piano and sometimes on guitar, or cello. They are different, the instrument really sets about how challenging this can be at times.

'I think the music I make is a bit genreless – I think

Voice of a Swan

Mei Lai Swan on Saturday at the Civic Hall, Mullumbimby

'I love songwriting and I love playing the cello. I write on piano and sometimes on guitar, or cello. They are different, the instrument really sets the parameters a song can go in.'

I started playing cello a few years ago, there are a lot of similarities with playing the violin, and I wouldn't say I am the world's best cellist – but it really helps me focus on songwriting.'

'I love songwriting and I the parameters a song can go in. Piano and guitar are more voice oriented, but when I compose on violin or cello I do it more orchestrally.'

Mei Lai Swan is an artist whose music escapes genre generalisation. She laughs it's funny because when you apply for festivals, you have to put a genre in, and I can't work out where I fit, I think there is a new genre of experimental singer songwriters that draws from a range of genres, but what we are doing is a new genre but doesn't have a name yet! Maybe I should make a name for the genre...'

Mei Lai is about to attend a JBSeed Project funded workshop for musicians focusing on music management.

'The workshop is about the music industry – it's hard work, (becoming a musician) it's a massive learning curve, I have only been doing it for two and half years.

'The music industry is changing so much even for a self managed artist, it's the booking the writing, the digital thing. I could have a full time job doing digital management, writing a whole lot of blogs. In fact I tried a new thing for this tour and for my single release I put it out on iTunes.'

Mei Lai looks forward to her gig at the Mullum Music Festival as a solo artist. Some may have seen her as the violinist in Lothlorien on several tours. She's definitely worth catching. Ms Swan's music is intoxicating.

Mei Lai plays on Saturday at the Civic Hall with the Band of Brothers and on Sunday in the Drill Hall.

Falling over Art at the Kliff

Last weekend I walked the Bondi to Tamarama sculpture show Sculpture by the Sea. It's great to see so many people out in nature, exercising and enjoying art at the same time. Interestingly, these type of events draw people who aren't your usual art lovers. These are dog walkers, families with kids, old people, young spunks and everything in between. With such spectacular coastal areas in our region it's only a matter of time before we clued up and got people enjoying their art in the great outdoors. The Burleigh Arts Group has spearheaded the whole art outside campaign by coordinating a new event called Art at the Kliff.

This will be a series of events where local artists showcase and sell their work in marquees in the park. Other events include Art in the Park at Burleigh and Art on the Boardwalk Hope Island. These events encourage community engagement in the arts as well as help artists get their work shown and possibly started in creative businesses.

The next Kingscliff event will be held on Sunday October 26 from 9.00-2.30pm DST at Marine parade Kingscliff. The event is also being held as a precursor to a new festival called KAFE (Kingscliff art food and entertainment) Fiesta being held in Kingscliff in May next year.

Andy Bull and Karma County at the Soundlounge

The Soundlounge will be presenting this Thursday October 23, Sydney's Andy Bull, supported by Brisbane's Tom Cooney. Andy Bull plays some very tidy keyboards and, with his backing band, makes fantastic live music. Andy Bull was here recently (ish) supporting The Panics. Tom Cooney supports, and comes to The Soundlounge promoting his very fresh release, Presque Vue. Friday October 24 sees a very welcome return of Karma County – one of Australia's favourite mainstream alt-country acts. Karma County are getting better and better with every visit, and they're keen to play for their loyal Gold Coast audience! One Karma Country visit per year is barely enough! From the initial acoustic strumming of Postcard to the funky latino www.tweedecho.com.au

twang of Dexter and Sinistra, Karma County have ranged across an eclectic music terrain to conjure their own sonic landscape - lush, melodious, thoughtful and emotive. They have just released their new album Headland, which is a collection of 36 tracks across 2 discs with songs from all 5 of their previous albums including the ARIA award winning Into the Land of Promise. The boys will be supported by country songstress Sara Tindley. www.thesoundlounge. com.au

Deya Dova

Deya Dova, vocalist and singer songwriter, has pioneered her own musical style through blending roots in the ancient musical traditions with live looping technology to create a truly unique world music sound. Her music traverses tribal chant, world beat, soul and resonates with Arabic, African, Asian, Aboriginal and Balkan scales.

Recent performance highlights include Splendour in the Grass Music Festival, Woodford Folk Festival, Brisbane Multicultural Festival, Noise TV, Exodus Live Festival, and the MusicOz Awards.

Deya Dova will be playing at the Buddha Belly Cafe at Cheynne who is a nationally recognised songwriter with television appearances, radio airplay and some major supports including performances with Pete Murray, Tex Perkins, Richard Clapton amongst others.

'These songs were all very much inspired by the hills and brooks of Byron. The hills carry such a sense of freedom, a deep soul connection, I wanted to catch this feeling in an authentic way, so we kept the recording stripped back and really focused on acoustic guitars and harmonies as a basis of the sound.'

The recording process involved a lot of spontaneous unrehearsed performances from local musicians which helped capture a rich organic feel, according to Cheynne. He has a series of upcoming gigs to promote the CD, starting with a feature performance at the Mullumbimby Folk Club on Thursday October 23 and then October 31 at the Brunswick Hotel. Both shows will feature the fine harmonies and guitar of Mark Heazlett and expect some special quest appearances from some of the musicians who recorded the EP including Toby Andrews on lead guitar and Guy Anderton on drums and percussion.

Chalkboard will be open

Are we there yet?

Going on holidays with my kids is like starring in my very own National Lampoon movie. It's always an adventure. (In retrospect.) I worked all through the kids' school holidays so I know the sting of mother's guilt as surely as I know the pinch of an uncomfortable shoe. After years of wear I am sure that I have developed a guilt bunion. It's irritated and causes pain every time I can't attend an assembly or a school sports day or forget to make them lunch.

I know the horror of the working mother – it is a legacy of endless toil. To make up for leaving the kids in the car during the school holidays I decided to take them on a trip to Sydney – yay! There's nothing that cements family harmony more than ten hours in a confined space. I remember doing it as a kid. Pre-airconditioning, kids would stick like unpricked sausages to the vinyl seats as hot wind blew in the windows of the Kingswood and together we'd sing every parent's favourite mantra 'Are We There Yet?'

First we fight for a radio station. The kids win. I am forced to listen to pop FM. The next fight is about the front seat. We haven't left the driveway yet. Everybody wants to sit in the front seat. I am tempted to let them and then get in the back and have a nice sleep. After tears and a biting episode we decide on a roster system which the kids monitor to the minute.

In a Holden Commodore stationwagon the size of a small truck, the front seat isn't even as comfortable as the back. It is about status. I only make it to Coffs. The farting, fighting and fussing do my head in. We book into Opal Cove - it's big and kid friendly and the kids love it except one of them decides to develop a phobia about lifts and won't get in. Never mind. It's a big foyer. While I have a mini-recovery nap the kids attack the mini-bar. Mistaking it for the family fridge they manage to work their way through everything except the beer. (They always prefer vodka, must be because that's what I drank when I was pregnant). In 20 minutes they've clocked up enough damage on the mini-bar to sink the economy of a third world country. I hate mini-bars. Why do they fill it with sugar? Why don't they put health food in there, and then no-one would touch the bloody thing.

The kids insist on swimming in the resort pool. It's 7.30pm. It's raining and it's cold. But they're on holidays. Why not. I stand in the drizzle and watch them frolic. We are definitely almost having fun now. Day two back on the road. After a $350 one night cash haemorrhage at reception I repack the car. It smells like an alcoholic. I wonder which one of my kids has been drinking. I search for the suspect: a KFC refresher towel, but find half a fresh carrot and orange juice spilled onto the floor, hidden by the car mat and a couple of pillows. It has already started fermenting. By evening we should have our own source of alco-pops. It's a mission to clean it up. I ask my son why he didn't tell me.... didn't you think I'd notice? He told me he was planning on throwing out the mat and the pillows and to continue his secret mission. Don't you think I'd notice the sudden disappearance of half the luggage?

With eight hours of driving ahead of us I decided to pick my battles, and it's not a good start to commence a day's drive with a lecture on being responsible. Although, it's tempting, and frankly I could do with hearing it myself. It's a relief to be back on the road. The kids garner some amusement from imagining living in the shitty roadside shacks along the highway. We stop at a servo and my daughter refuses to use their toilet. 'Let's get out, Mum, it's like Wolf Creek'. 'You haven't seen Wolf Creek.''No, but I've seen the cover.' She's right. When we drove out I'm sure I saw John Jarratt at the pump.

We look for a lunch spot. We are tempted by the Restaurant at Kew, called, you guessed it: Far Kew. Instead we drive through to Taree and find a pub for lunch on the river. It's very pleasant although it's hard to digest your food. No-one in the beer garden had a neck. The fights about pillow space start. Ipods run out of charge. There is no radio range except country stations that play music from the 50s. We are forced to chat. Finally we are in NOVA range, an hour or two outside of Sydney.

I check my watch. I have timed it perfectly. At this rate we should be hitting Sydney at peak hour! Yes, an extra two hours in traffic! Being a country kid myself I still remember the excitement of driving into a city, the thrill that high density living gives: the feeling that this is a place where something is happening all of the time. The kids experience the same thrill but in the bumper to bumper traffic it wears off. Someone has a headache. No, two of them have a headache. Someone needs the toilet. I won't stop. I can't stop. I make it across the bridge, gliding across six lanes of traffic to the welcome of city beeps. We hit Newtown, negotiating streets that are so tightly packed with parked cars I don't know how anyone keeps their duco. A kindly old woman driving in the other direction tries to push past me but I can't move, she's forced to back up. She winds down her window and shouts 'moron!' Ah, welcome to Sydney. Let the games begin.

Mt Warning on Friday. Entry is $12 at the door.

Mullumbimby Folk Club

The Mullumbimby Folk Club is in for a real treat this coming Thursday with their feature act, Cheynne Murphy showcasing his new EP along with another folk club favourite talented singer-songwriter Mark Heazlett. The duo have worked closely together on the new recording which is heavily harmony based with a folk pop feel.

This is the third EP from from 7pm for any original songwriters who would like the opportunity to get up and perform a couple of songs. Shannon at Seagulls

Shannon Noll's upcoming concert on his No Turning Back national tour will take in the Stardust Room at Seagulls on Friday October 31 at 8.30pm.

Shannon Noll at Seagulls on Friday October 31

This concert celebrates the release of Shannon's latest album No Turning Back: The Story So Far, featuring 10 of the biggest hits of his career and five new songs, including the new single Summertime. Shannon's relatively brief career has produced a long list of hit singles including What About Me, Loud, In Pieces, Lift, Shine, Now I Run, Lonely, Don't Give Up and Drive, and new tracks Summertime, No Turning Back, You're Never Alone, Tomorrow and Crash.

Gaining a national profile when he competed in the first series of Australian Idol, Shannon has, since this time, pumped out the hits, toured the country and performed at some of the highest profile events nationally. Shannon Noll has gone from strength to strength and continues to gain respect as an artist and grow his massive fan base and profile. With the release of this latest album, Shannon has firmly made his mark in the Australian music scene. This is vour chance to listen to enjoy a night full of top 40 hits live in the Stardust Room, performed by the man himself, the boy from Condobolin.

TaikOz

Featuring Australia's premier drum ensemble, Riley Lee, grand master of shakuhachi and Timothy Constable, percussion virtuoso. With ancient practice at its core, TaikOz combines tradition with the latest Australian and Japanese compositions. Combining the primal power of the Japanese taiko drums with the ethereal tones of Riley Lee's bamboo shakuhachi, TaikOz are exploring a synthesis of East and West, old and new. 'Sinewy and muscular physicality... a winner, irresistible to all listening affiliations in its visceral engagement with the deep sources of mercilessly pounded sound. Sydney Morning Herald.

Loving Lisa Mitchell

The name will ring a bell, but maybe you can 't quite place her. Lisa Mitchell was first introduced to Australia as a stand-out finalist on the 2006 series of Australian Idol. Her extraordinary natural talent shone through a shy 16 yearold exterior and it was clear to all that Lisa has something very special. But Lisa wasn't to take the road of an overnight pop-star. Rather she's spent the past two years developing her craft in her own time and at her own pace.

Between 2006 and now this folk pop darling from Albury, has been busy developing her sound and show. She independently recorded and released EP's Said One to the Other' ((2007) which reached #1 on the iTunes Charts and Welcome to the Afternoon (2008). Both garnered critical acclaim and gained airplay on Triple J and community radio. Lisa teamed up with a number of similar minded artists including Evermore, Ben Lee, Old Man River, and Bob Evans for advice and inspiration. She toured the country several times developing a real fanbase and performed regular live shows on her MySpace page to her younger fans from Idol.

Having previously toured with Australian indie rock legends Ben Lee, Tex Perkins and Evermore, Lisa is relishing the chance to headline her own tour. 'I'm really looking forward to coming home and doing these shows. Being on stage with a band of musicians will be a new thing for me as I usually play by myself.' She's at the Currumbin SoundLounge on Thursday.

LeBelle are Beautiful

Mesmerizing four-piece band LeBelle headline Unplugged in the Basement this Thursday with folk trio Jeunesse as support. Formed in October 2005 LeBelle has been busy performing their atmospheric rock songs on the local stages of Gold Coast and Brisbane. Band members include, Sheri Motiekaitis- Piano and vocals, Mitch Finglas – Guitar and vocals, Jay Carter - Bass Guitar and Brent Quirk – Drums and backing vocals. LeBelle's compositions capture the essence of modern rock, with their powerful, majestic sound, hard hitting hooks, beautiful piano melodies and stunning vocal harmonies. Supporting LeBelle on Thursday night are some of the finest musicians Australia has to offer, folk trio, Jeunesse. Jeunesse's sound combines the intricate, smoky flavours of Folk, Blues and Jazz, in addition to catchy hooks, and edible melodies - this band is very easy on the ears.

Writing together on and off for four years they have toured live across Australia and abroad. Don't miss these two talented bands perform their music in the laid-back surroundings of Unplugged in the Basement – the best Thursday night out on the coast! Tickets $7 before 8pm, $10 after 8pm.

The Sumptuos Miss Sarah

With the January release of her new record Teapot Trees and Lovebirds Sarah Humphreys is quickly becoming the songwriter to watch in '08. Produced by Michael Carpenter at Love Hz Studios in Sydney, this is an album of 60's inspired folk/pop songs that will make you cry and smile at exactly the same time.

The last few years has seen Sarah touring the country with the likes of Kasey Chambers, Sara Storer, Mick Hart and Diesel. This, combined with Triple J, FBI (Sydney), RRR (Melbourne) and community radio support means her independent records are enjoying success around Australia. Her 2005 release, an EP by the name of Ghost On The Roof, recorded at Sarah's house in Wamberal on the NSW Central Coast, received rave reviews for its organic and honest delivery and radio airplay around the country, all of which exceeded her expectations.

'I was hoping to sell 100 copies! I thought that would be terrific. I took a break from music for nine months, then put the EP out. The break and the rest made me remember why I love doing what I do, I remembered that as long as I was playing, that's all I needed. So all the teenage dreams of becoming a rock star went out of the window and I just enjoyed every moment, whatever was happening. I stopped chasing and wondering and that's when everything started happening for me, says Sarah. It was then repackaged and re-released to the delight of her steadily growing audience. A natural singer, her voice and songs come from a very honest place. Drawing inspiration from a broad range of influences including Nick Drake, Joni Mitchell, Frente and ELO, her songs are melodically rich and straight from the heart. Sunday from 2-6pm at Sphinx Rock Cafe.

It's Chenanigans with Flanagan

If you ask anyone in the comedy industry to name the top three Australian women comics, Kitty Flanagan's name would rate right near the top. Kitty is one of the most accomplished comics around starting out in Full Frontal over a decade ago, Kitty is a pretty girl that has the most curious talent for characterisation. It's the source of her hilarious charm. A successful standup up comedian and TV writer/ performer in Australia, Kitty Flanagan moved to the UK in 2001 to further her comedy career.

Since returning from London where she became a regular on the top UK comedy circuit including the prestigious London Comedy Store, she also managed to travel the world performing in festivals and comedy clubs everywhere from Paris to Berlin, Dubai to Tokyo and Canada to Cannes....

She has also appeared on The Micallef Show (AUS) and The Sketch Show (UK). There have also been numerous TV standup appearances, including The World Stands Up on Comedy Central (US). Not content to be constantly directed by others, Kitty recently decided she needed to be the boss of everyone and set out to direct her own work. The result is the short film Dating Ray Fenwick.

Kitty appears with support act Nick Penn, an impressive headline comic who has moved from Sydney to the Nimbin region to enjoy the country life. It's become the perfect base for Nick who works all over the country, headlining comedy clubs and performing as a corporate act. Incorporating didge and a very loud jacket, Nick's repertoire is rapid fire.

Kitty Flanagan appears at the Byron Pandanus Lounge with Nick Penn and Mandy Nolan (me) as MC on Monday November 3 at 8pm. Tix are $20/25 and can be purchased at the club or booked on

This Friday the Western suburbs of Sydney come to the Gold Coast Arts Centre when Tahir from Fat Pizza headlines at Comedy in the Basement. He wowed audiences with sell-out shows in 2007 and 2008, so as you might have guessed, Tahir is back by popular demand. Tahir has headlined most comedy venues around the country, as well as being involved in major comedy festivals, panel shows, television debates and even celebrity theatresports! In 2004, Tahir appeared in the fourth series of Pizza on SBS as the much loved and hilarious character Habib. He was also an integral member of the team in the hit movie Fat Pizza. More recently, Tahir hosted the smash hit comedy standup production Show Us Your Roots. His most recent shows were Hollywood Kebabs and Live and Circumcised.

We are not sure if a DESCENT of relatives refers to hereditary lineage or to the way they descend on your place at Christmas. After dining on a DIVING of teal, a DOPPING of ducks, a DOADING of sheldrakes and a DOWN of hare they may drop like a DECK of cards. If they are particularly bad rellies they could be a DEN of thieves so beware, but if they are very nice, perhaps they should be called a DECENT of rellies instead, but then again a DRIFT of hogs might fly. Locally there is a DEARTH of buses (OK, it's not a collective noun, but the DAZE of backpackers on the Nimbin one is).

Burn After Reading

Now that the dust has settled, it's clear that the most lasting impression of Joel and Ethan Coen's over-hyped No Country For Old Men was made by Javier Bardem's haircut. Lifting a line from W B Yeats might have been clever enough to win them an Oscar but it did not automatically mean that the poet's vision would illuminate their movie and now, with their latest curio, Brad Pitt's fabulous Kookie coif threatens to once again steal the show. We love the Coens because they let us think we're smart and, even better than that at street level, 'alternative' – notwithstanding this year's admission into the conservative fold of the Academy.

Though undoubtedly gifted and original, filmmakers as pleased with themselves as the brothers so blatantly are can get a wee bit tiresome, especially when they repeatedly fall short of delivering on their tantalising promises. In this we have John Malkovich quitting the CIA in a grand huff after being demoted. He harbours self-deluding plans to write a memoir while his soon to be estranged wife, Tilda Swinton, bearing a spooky resemblance to Julia Gillard, cheats on him with George Clooney, a married Lothario who plays the internet dating game. Loopy, gum chewing Pitt and Frances McDormand, needing to raise the money to pay for some cosmetic surgery, are co-workers at Hardbodies gym who attempt to blackmail Malkovich, mistakenly believing that the CD of his jottings that has come into their possession contains top secret government information. Their scheme goes pear shaped and all of the characters find themselves embroiled in an intricately conceived and sometimes hilarious farce that is bloodied out of the blue by a turning point of startling violence. This act and a murder of maniacal brutality wipe the smile off your face and hammer home the quintessentially bleak world view that underpins all of the Coens' work.

Their long time composer Carter Burwell's music - recalling his monumental score for Fargo – sometimes feels too designed, maudlin potboiler. Prejudices aside though, for all of its sumptuousness, attention to detail and apparent integrity, this over-long film is critically nobbled by the fact that not one character emerges with whom you would want to spend more time than was absolutely necessary (and the feeling is mutual, for these types would brush you as soon as look at you).

Charles Ryder, a chinless wonder for the ages, goes up to Oxford to study history, but he really wants to be a painter. The aspiring artist meets and is beguiled by Sebastian Flyte, a weighty when overlaying the irreverence, but a penchant for selling the bogus as profound is a stock in trade for many contemporary artists.

Meanwhile, Malkovich exasperatedly sprays 'what the fuck!?' so many times that you wonder if an attempt is being made at breaking the world record for the phrase's appearance in a script. On reflection, however, those three words may well summarise the theme of the movie, if not the Coens' entire œuvre. Could that be part of the joke? Whatever – I thoroughly enjoyed it.

Brideshead Revisited

It would be interesting to know exactly how many people will come to this movie having seen the TV series as opposed to having read the book. Asserting that an adaptation has remained faithful to the television version does not quite cut the mustard when compared to being able to relate it to the original written word - of which, I admit, I am entirely ignorant. Wringing one's hands for the trials and tribulations of England's landed gentry is a bit like losing sleep over the fate of Wall Street financiers, but it remains ever fashionable and it is given deluxe treatment in this beautifully shot, exquisitely stitched-up homosexual whose overbearing, devoutly Catholic mother, Lady Marchmain, has been driving him to alcoholism. Charles becomes a regular at Brideshead, the family house, where he falls in love with Julia, Sebastian's sister, but his atheism and her inculcated sense of gulit put the kibosh on any desire the pair might have to get up close and personal. Charles, as an intimate outsider, doesn't do much else other than observe the Flytes as they struggle with and are consoled by the tenets of their faith. Matthew Goode is perfect as Rvder, which is a backhanded compliment at best, Ben Whishaw's Sebastian is darker and more self-pitying than was TV's Anthony Andrews's interpretation, while Hayley Atwell successfully juggles the demands of being both resilient and vulnerable as Julia. Michael Gambon does an agreeably reprobate Old Man Flyte and, as his Italian mistress, how sobering it is to see that years have also caught up with the adorable Greta Scaachi. But it is Emma Thompson who towers over them all as the stony, daunting matriarch. Waugh came to Catholicism late in life and, if this is anything to go by, his religious awakening only served to underline the old truism that converts are the pits. Pretty but dismal.

Jazzing up education

When the John Hoffman Trio and their support act take the stage at the next meeting of the Tweed Valley Jazz Club on October 31, it will be a living demonstration of a remarkable partnership in musical education.

John Hoffman, a Queensland Conservatorium lecturer and former lead trumpet with the Buddy Rich Big Band, taught last week's 250-strong schools workshop at the Civic Centre in Murwillumbah. He will be joined in his trio by Elizabeth Lord and Sharney Russell.

Support act, the Julian Holland quartet, consists of young award-winning brothers Julian on guitar and Nigel on percussion, Bundjalung man and didgeridoo player Brook

Turner-Mann, and teacher Peter McLaughlin, who is also president of the Jazz Club. The club, which meets in the delightful surroundings of Greenhills on Tweed at Murwillumbah, puts every cent it makes from its monthly events back into the education of young musicians like the Holland boys. That's some $2,000 to fund the annual schools workshop, and as much again to provide prizes and trophies each winter for the musical categories in the Festival of the Performing Arts, still known to many locals by its original name, the Eisteddfod. The club not only ensures that winners judith@tweedecho.com.au receive a sum of money and a trophy, but books them their first professional gig.

> 'All our surplus funds go to the education of young local musicians,' says McLaughlin. 'We tend to keep a low profile in the area. You could say we're quiet achievers.'

> The jazz club committee is united in its commitment to the endeavour. It includes secretary-treasurer Graham Robinson, who along with McLaughlin was a founding member 12 years ago, vicepresident Joan Daniels, and Bill Gracie, Len Dods, Virginia Field and Syd Sycamore.

> If you've ever wondered at the profusion of school bands in the area, and the significant numbers of young people who go on to musical careers, the reasons are not least the dedication of local teachers and the enthusiastic support of the region's performing musicians.

both categories, but he's quick to recognise the area's strong artistic tradition. He gives a lot of the credit for that to the support of the Anthony family and to the 80-year-old Eisteddfod event, which now has some 6.000 entrants annually. 'And of course the area has attracted a large number of retired or semi-retired musicians, who do some classes and put on concerts.

McLaughlin himself falls into

A teacher for the past 17 years at Mount St Patrick, he has been closely involved with both public and private schools in music programs. When the club brought jazz legend Don Burrows to perform at Greenhills, he also gave a master class at Kingscliff High School. Club members have also participated in stunningly successful programs to place unemployed youth in the entertainment industry.

The club's program for this month reflects the scope of its contribution to the area. On the one hand there is John Hoffman, who has played with the likes of Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald and Ray Charles, and is happy to teach school students. And then there is Julian Holland, who grew up in Murwillumbah, won multiple gold medals at the Festival of the Performing Arts, and is now studying classical guitar at the Conservatorium in Brisbane.

They may be guiet achievers within the community, but the jazz club is sure to raise the roof on the last Friday of each month.

Tweed Valley Jazz Club, October 31, 6pm. Greenhills on Tweed, River St, Murwillumbah. Entrance for members and guests $15, dinner and drinks extra.

Right side of the quilt

Quilting is one of those skills that's both an ancient craft and a highly developed modern art form. These days the finest examples often make their way into museum collections. The National Museum of Australia in Canberra has some beauties, and they speak volumes about our social history.

The craft has hundreds of devotees in the Tweed region, involved, by joining a quilting group or taking classes. At Mooball sisters Jill Barrett and Susan Hoskinson opened their sewing and haberdashery shop Moomoo Stitches just over a year ago, and are now deluged with people signing up.

Classes include patchworking, Christmas gifts, landscape quilting (with Mt Warning as the current subject of the collaborative class quilt) and jacket-making. A charity group meets at the shop every second Wednesday afternoon to make knee guilts destined for places like the Coolamon aged care facility, where every resident receives one as a welcoming gift. If there's a skill you'd like to learn that Jill and Sue don't have, they'll do their best to find a tutor. You can even book for a weekend retreat.

For more information, go to www.moomoostitches.com.au or call 6677 0200.

Right in the centre of Murwillumbah, Sewing Pleasures also offers classes for beginners and advanced quilters, and current classes there also include one for making Christmas decorations and gifts. Call Sandy on 6672 1131.

At Banora Point, the Tweed Valley Embroiderers' Group meets on the first and third Tuesdays of the month, from 9.30am to 1pm.

For those aiming at the dizzying heights of art prizes, Art Quilt Australia recently announced its first major national competition, to take place next year. The entry deadline is July 24, 2009, and an exhibition of selected entries will take place at Canberra's Craft and Design Centre in November and December next year. Entry forms are available by email from quiltmakers@ozquiltnetwork. org.au or by post from Art Quilt Australia 09, Ozquilt Network Inc, PO Box 528, Springwood NSW 2777.

'Koto – A Culinary Journey Through Vietnam'

Vietnam seemed, some years back, to overtake Thailand and Indonesia in terms of popularity and as a fashionable destination. Friends returning from trips there rave about the countryside, about the people - and especially about the food. And yet it has taken a cookbook to truly inspire me to visit this country.

'Koto' is both the name of the book and the name of a restaurant project designed to provide street kids with employment and life prospects. Well before Jamie Oliver had in his flamboyant and muchtelevised way introduced the concept of Fifteen, an Australian-Vietnamese expat called Jimmy Pham devised a way to involve disadvantaged Vietnamese youths in the hospitality industry, providing them with training and employment first in a small sandwich shop then, as success followed, in larger training restaurants. A chance meeting with visiting Melbourne chef Tracey Lister and her husband Andreas Pohl resulted in the latter immersing themselves 24 October 23, 2008 The Tweed Shire Echo for two years in the project and ultimately the publication of the cookbook.

COOKING THE BOOKS

Andreas, an academic, is largely responsible for the text, Tracey for the recipes, and a London-based commercial photographer called Michael Fountoulakis for the glorious visuals. The result is a fascinating insight into this country, whose 2,000 year old history has been characterised by struggles against oppression and occupation by much bigger, more powerful countries – countries, however, which left their own distinctive stamps (the Chinese rice, Buddhism and Confucianism; the French opera houses, transport systems and pastries, for example...). Movingly and often amusingly written, it traces history, tradition and culture in a tone of both respect and humility, refreshingly devoid of condescension: evocative writing which transports you to the deltas and the riverways. Recipes interweave the sections devoted to the various regions and centres of Vietnam, each which comes with its 'featured ingredient'.

So, for example, the Mekong Delta features rice paper, the coast fish sauce, the Central Highlands artichokes. Prefacing most recipes is an interesting comment on the dish or on a certain ingredient in writing often so vivid you feel compelled to start cooking immediately.

The book divides Vietnam's fifty-nine provinces into seven main food regions, and the recipes themselves are a mix of classics such as beef noodle soup (pho bo) and less common dishes like eel filled with pork and lemongrass. To be sure I found many of them called for hard-to-find or specialised ingredients – and I was also struck by the amount requiring deep-frying – but there were as many I was eager to try, mouth-watering in description and simple enough for a cook unversed in Asian culinary technique. Lemongrass Tofu, Pippis Steamed in Beer with Chilli and Lemongrass, Baby Chicken Char-Grilled with Kaffir Lime Leaf, Taro Cakes and Rice Porridge with Fish and Dill: these dishes all had me mentally preparing my next dinner party.

to rice, which in this country is a part of life itself. The common greeting 'An com chua' translates directly to 'Have you eaten rice yet?' but actually means 'Are you well?' The section at the back entitled 'Vietnamese Pantry' explains those more obscure ingredients - ingredients which are, however, fundamental to the cuisine. The book winds up with a fascinating discussion of the various beverages to be had - including a type of coffee made from coffee beans which have been fed to weasels then later reclaimed from the droppings; and rice liquor sold in large glass jars wherein float curled-up snakes, sea-horses and silkworms! Finally, not only is the book dedicated to all the trainees, volunteers and staff at Koto, but all its royalties will go back into the Koto project. 'Koto – A Culinary Journey Through Vietnam' by Tracey Lister and Andreas Pohl, Hardie Grant Books.

PUMPKIN SOUP TO DIE FOR Supplied by Dolph and Gilly from the Dolphin Juice Cafe

20mls of vegie oil 1 big kent (Jap) pumpkin peeled and cut into 1cm cubes

1 bulb of garlic 2 brown onions 2 teaspoons of Masseal Vegie Stock water

Wash and peel pumpkin, gut and wash again, then cube.

Wash and peel onions then tinely dice them. Crush peel and wash garlic then finely dice it. Put 2 teaspoons of stock into 1 litre of water.

Ingredients Do not have the heat too high or the pumpkin onion and garlic will burn. You just want to sweat the pumpkin

Secret Chef's Technique

Sweating the pumpkin in this manner brings out the full flavour. It's time consuming (30 – 60 mins) but yields the best flavour. Health care note: True Celtic sea salt has 82 minerals and should not be confused with table salt which has 2 minerals. People on a salt restricted diet can use true Celtic sea salt without complication so this soup is a very healthy vegetarian meal.

An entire chapter is devoted

For further information on the KOTO project go to www. koto.com.au

Put a big pot on the heat add the oil and then sauté the onions and garlic. Then pour the cubed pumpkin in to the pot stirring to mix well.

Put the heat to low simmer.

And liberally shake Celtic sea salt onto the pumpkin to help the sweating. Place lid on the pot and stir occasionally.

After a time you will note that the pumpkin soup will resemble a puree. Add the stock and water.

Use whatever tool you have to make the pumpkin into a soup; food processor, blender, potato masher, fork etc.

Add more water if needed. Serve with sour cream and tiny croutons (sippets). Works well with garlic Turkish toast.

At the end of the 2007 FIDE World Championship tourna-ment in Mexico City Peter Leko was effusive in his praise for the winner, Viswanthan Anand. 'I have been very good friends with Vishy for 15 years and I wished always that Vishy becomes champion so it was something special that we had the last game together and that I could be the first to congratulate him. I know how hard he was working for it all his life so he deserves it.

Three months later, Leko began working with Vladimir Kramnik to defeat Anand.

Leko's move to become one of Kramnik's support team was the best-kept secret surrounding the ongoing world Championship match in Bonn, revealed only last week.

Though Kramnik and Leko share the same manager, they have been long-time rivals, culminating in Leko's world title challenge to Kramnik in 2004. Leko was leading the title contest before the final game but allowed Kramnik to reach a 7-7 tie and retain his crown. 'I have been working with Vlad since the start of the year, Leko admitted, 'but if it is a secret then it must be kept secret?

with me in my 1997 world title match in Lausanne against Karpov,' the Indian explained, 'but that was more than 10 years ago. It is normal for him to take an attractive offer.

Leko insisted that he remained on excellent terms with both Anand and Kramnik. 'Actually it's great to see these two players – the greatest players since Kasparov retired – finally get to play a match.'

Being a top ten player gives Leko no special privileges in the team - he will be holed up in the Kramnik camp throughout the match, often analysing through the night and sleeping while his emplover plays.

'I'm glad that the match is played in the heart of Europe under such great conditions?

SPORT RESULTS BOWLS Pottsville Women

On Tuesday, October 14, the club hosted the Pelican Fours with a good roll up of bowlers from various clubs in the District.

The morning began with morning tea followed by two rounds of eleven ends.

Prizes were announced and awarded over afternoon tea. The Mystery Prize went to a Pottsville team of J Afflick, D Connolly, drawn with the winners being B Stone (Ocean Shores) and C Cecil (Pottsville). Second prize winners were J Wright (Byron Bay) and M Campbell (Pottsville).

Thursday October 21: A great Friendship afternoon was held at our club on a very windy, gusty day. The sun shone brilliantly and everyone had a great time battling the elements. Club members asked a friend, or two, from another club to come and play. After everyone had introduced their friends, the ladies went on to the green where 'spiders' were waiting. Afterwards there was a sumptious afternoon tea with winners being announced. Marg Shanley, Murwillumbah and friend of Vice President Heather Woodbridge, won both first and second Raffle prizes. Lucky lady! The winning team was Heather Pierce-Wilcox, Cath Lynch and Julie Kent. Runner Up was Jan Richards, Jenny Afflick and Maryann Sweetnam. Congratulations, ladies. Updates: Oct 27: District Shield at Pottsville.

As interest in the game grew the ladies applied to the Bowling Club to have a lawn built for croquet next to their Club. (In those days ladies were not allowed to play bowls!) Approval was given and for the princely sum of Forty Pounds rental per annum, the ladies became Croquet Members of the Bowling Club.

However when the war ended the Bowling Club needed their lawn back to accommodate their returning bowlers, and the ladies were consequently asked to vacate their lawn. Fortunately, the Tweed Shire Council came to the rescue and found them land in Knox Park to set up a Croquet Club which is still in use after 81 years.

The Club is a part of the following eight clubs known as the Gold Coast Tweed Region; Burleigh Heads/Palm Beach, against each other and both marjandtom@audaust.org.au.

The Club is open for play Sundays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Coaching for new players is arranged for Sunday afternoons, or any other time suitable to the Coach and the prospective new member. Four free lessons are given before signing up as a member. Equipment is supplied and the only requisite asked for is soft soled shoes. Present membership is 40 players, the youngest being 39 – a lovely age to commence this fascinating, challenging game.

The Murwillumbah Club throughout the year: the March Doubles Association Tournament attracts players from New Zealand and all Australevent. The Region also holds the annual July Gold Coast Tweed Region Association Doubles Tournament again attracting players from far and wide and Murwillumbah Club hosts many of these events on their lawns.

Competitions in their own Club are also exciting events. Having singles matches between members is an excellent way to improve one's own game, and doubles with a more experienced player again is a step up to becoming a better player.

A special invitation is issued to all who like a challenge, and want to try this game for the active mind, the fresh air, and the camaraderie that exists in the Croquet world.

Letting the good times roll

Historically a form of sports entertainment, roller derby dates at least as far back as 1922, when an American newspaper, the Chicago Tribune, used the name to describe flat-track roller skating races.

Roller derby was very popular in the 70s and 80s when women in short, short, short outfits would bash and crash their way around the rink but these days it is more of a true sport than a spectacle and the resurgence of Roller Derby has since spread to Canada, Germany, Ireland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Sweden, the UK and Australia.

Contemporary roller derby is a 5 a side competition with a strong interchange system which has a strict code of safety conduct and specific requirements including helmets, pad and mouth guards. It is considered a bona fide sport while track women's leagues, a few North Brisbane, Melbourne, glamorous aspects of costume and drama.

We hope that Chinderah motel owner Kevin Skinner hasn't blown his council allowance all at once to acquire his new set of wheels. According to our Kingscliff spotters, the Chinderah champ has ditched his faithful but less-than-stylish Holden for a schmick -looking blue Jaguar saloon. He is said to look every inch the man-about-town as he cruises his manor behind trademark sunnies, dispensing cheery waves. Far from being a show of ostentation, we suspect that his frequent outings are simply a determined effort to find a site for a marina which he promised to actively explore once he became a councillor. Council colleague Katie Milne, who killed off Kev's dream of a marina in his hometown, is said to be monitoring developments.

Talking of allowances, a former councillor who's never been a fan of comeback kid Phil Youngblutt reckons it's no coincidence that the Fernvale orchardist has shunned all council committees except one: the Far North Coast County Council (also known as Far North Coast Weeds). The council is the only one which comes with a small stipend to councillor members of around $2,700 pa for attending six meetings each year. Our informant says that when the county council decided to limit representation to just one paid position during the term of a previous council, Warren and his other National Party mates graciously gave Phil the nod. Then again, as a property owner who's constantthink of anyone more suited to the job. Anyway it's hard to begrudge him a little financial compensation while he sits in the bleachers with little or no chance of influencing council decisions – at least for the time being.

A reminder that entries for Tweed Shire Council's photo competition for people with a disability close tomorrow, Friday, October 24. The theme of the comp is 'My favourite place' and entry is free. An exhibition of selected photos will be held at the library in the Tweed Heads Civic Centre from December 3-17. For info call Maggie Groff on (02) 6670 2442.

The Echo's roving camera in downtown Murwillumbah recently snapped Lyall Sutcliffe of Pottsville as he busked on Main Street, playing 'just country music'. Lyall has busked at the Tamworth Country Music festival and produced five CDs of his own brand of 'country gospel' and 'ordinary' country music. Lyall loves Murwilliumbah 'because the people just seem to be country style people.'

400 to 500 people – on the grounds that it was not a significant event. A local who owns a business in the main street has confirmed our eve-witness accounts of ly fighting the farmers' friends, we can't mounted and riot squad police pushing the brawlers back across the border from whence they came. Asked how he would rate the event our bewildered businessman said: 'It was the worst I've seen all year. In fact it was the worst I've ever seen in the town.' Another eyewitness said in the early stage of the running brawls the cops grouped together for safety and appeared powerless to intervene. We hope that the cops played down the event to try to maintain the town's well-deserved tourist reputation rather than bowing to their high-handed political masters who have rejected NSW offers for cooperative action on the basis that their men in blue need no help in containing cross-border problems.

port-beleaguered residents of Pottsville. Parsons Bus and Coach Services this week started a twice daily weekday service to Murwillumbah via Pottsville and Clothiers Creek as an alternative for shoppers who are tired of enduring the extended Cooks Tour when they catch a Surfside bus to Tweed Heads.

Kingscliff Public School is holding its annual spring festival (formerly its fete) this Saturday, October 25, from 3pm to 7pm at the school's grounds in Orient Street, Kingscliff. Highlights include live performances, a great variety of food, family games and market stalls. A designated toddler zone with painting activities, a mini jumping castle and play area will be a boon for parents and a signed surfboard by eight of the local area's greatest surfers will be on display with expressions of interest taken for purchase of the board. A swarm of cyclists converged on Stokers Siding last Sunday to help raise money for local charities. One of the organisers of the event, Tony Worrad, said the ride was a family affair organised through Rotary. 'We have experienced and first time riders joining in the ride from Stokers Siding to the showground in Murwillumbah, about 10 kilometres, Mr Worrad said. First timer Sue Worrad said she was a little nervous about the ride because she wasn't confident with gears. 'But I can always get into the backup car if my gears snap,' she said. Joining Sue on the ride were her two children Karli, 7, who was riding alone for the first time and Georgia, 5, who would be riding in a tag-along with her dad, Tony. The group of adults and children set off on the back road from Stokers Siding at about 10am and made it safely, if not a little wearily, to the showground.
