Greens MP returned with increased majority

Greens MP Tamara Smith (Ballina electorate) will return to NSW parliament after a convincing win last Saturday night. She beat strong contender Ben Franklin (Nationals) 60.83 per cent to 39.17 per cent after preferences were distributed.

The NSW Ballina electorate covers both Byron and Ballina Shires.

The total percentage of first preference votes for other candidates was: James Wright with 1.58 per cent (Keep Sydney Open), Cathy Blasonato with 2.38 per cent (Animal Justice Party), Asren Pugh with 25.17 per cent (Country Labor), Lisa Mcdermott with 2.04 per cent (Sustainable Australia).

Byron Shire and Ballina Shire booths – a quick breakdown

Byron Shire – Tamara Smith MP dominated the Byron Shire booths on the two candidate preferred vote, claiming many convincingly.

Ballina Shire – After preferences were tallied, the two candidate preferred vote shows that The National's Ben Franklin won most of Ballina, claiming (sometimes close) booths in Alstonville High, the Ballina Community Centre, Ballina Hospital, Emmanuel Anglican College, Empire Vale Public, Fernleigh Public, Newrybar Public, Rous Public, Southern Cross School and Tintenbar Public, Wardell Hall and Wollongbar Public. Tamara Smith claimed the booths of Ballina High, Meerschaum Vale Hall and Lennox Head Public.

People who voted early favoured Smith way ahead of Franklin 3,384 to 1,647.

Greens-led Council policy neglect leads to old growth loss

Paul Bibby

The illegal removal of an old growth tree at the Tallowood Ridge development in Mullumbimby has highlighted significant flaws in Council planning processes for the site, residents say.

Last month, Byron Council staff fined a home owner on the estate $3,000 for chopping down the tree in their backyard, which locals estimated to be between 50 and 100 years old.

Tree unprotected

But residents say the removal would never have happened in the first place if Council had included the tree in a protected zone rather than allowing it to be included in private property.

'At the most basic level you have to wonder why you would let someone build a house directly underneath a tree like that,' Tallowood resident and local ecologist Dave Rawlins said.

'When you take a step back from this, it's actually part of the ongoing loss of remnant bushland in the ridge as a result of poor council planning.'

The tree was part of the Moiball Spur, a traditional Aboriginal walking trail that stretches from Mount Chincogan to Koonyum Range and beyond, to one of the last patches of remnant rainforest in NSW.

Vale Owen Danvers, 1941–2019

Aslan Shand

From humble beginnings in Waratah in Newcastle, Owen Campbell Danvers learned early the importance of contributing to his family and then to the community.

While he was a student at Pelican Flat Primary School, he also worked at the local bakehouse delivering bread and milk to support his family and himself.

At the age of fifteen, Owen joined the Royal Australian Navy as part of the second intake at the Royal Australian Navy Training Establishment at Schofields/Quakers Hill in Western Sydney.

Owen left the Navy after his apprenticeship in 1961, and worked as an engineer in mechanical industries.

After Owen began to experience stress and fatigue at work, he was diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis (MS).

Owen then became a volunteer with the Multiple Sclerosis Society and spent 16 years as its director. In 1997, Owen received an award from the then-Governor of NSW, Dame Marie Bashir, in recognition of his years of service as a dedicated volunteer.

Love of his life

It was after he started his own successful business in Sydney that Owen met Andrea. He had admired her from afar, but after he found out they both lived in the same apartment block, their friendship developed.

Andrea was the 'love of his life' and they married in Dubbo in 1987 and enjoyed a happy three decades together. In 1997, Owen and Andrea retired to Mullumbimby. But not being one to sit around, Owen was quickly involved in a variety of local organisations, volunteering for the Mullumbimby Neighbourhood Centre and the Brunswick Valley Marine Rescue, where he became the first Unit Commander.

He also became Communications Officer at the Mullumbimby State Emergency Service.

In 2010, he was key to the merging of the three former rescue organisations that became Marine Rescue NSW.

He became the unit

commander for its subbranch, the Marine Rescue Brunswick.

During that time, he oversaw the procurement of a new RIB vessel, known as Brunswick 30, as well as the purchase of a new air-berth to house the vessel. He also helped to introduce the Sea Hawke live boat tracking system to the radio tower.

Owen will be remembered for his commitment, friendship, kindness and willingness to help others, along with his generous contribution to this community.

Water utility Rous Water says Northern Rivers' residents use approximately 194 litres of water, per person, per day on average.

With a rapidly growing population and more extreme weather conditions, understanding your water usage is key, says Rous Water.

Byron Shire's water is mostly sourced from Rocky Creek Dam, which is reliant on rainfall.

To highlight the importance of wise water use, Rous Water has launched a challenge for your household over 30 days.

Ballina electorate re-elects Greens MP

All results are sourced from www.vtr.elections.nsw.gov.au.

Tamara Smith told The Echo, 'I'm incredibly grateful to be given a second term as the Member for Ballina and humbled by the support of the community.

'It's been a big four years and we had a lot thrown at us and I'm proud of the positive agenda and campaign we ran.'

Climate change

'I'm so looking forward to being much much bolder and less hesitant to push the agenda on climate change for NSW. With the longest, driest and hottest summer on record for us in the Northern Rivers, we cannot wait another day for a renewable energy target and a complete green light on a renewables boom for NSW.

'The Liberals and

Nationals can be left with no doubt that our community is demanding strong action on climate change, the capacity to manage our own affairs and the resources to do so, a complete no on mega developments, increased health and transport services and protection of our waterways and precious biodiversity.

'I want to acknowledge the commitment and energy that both the Nationals and Labor candidates put into their campaigns and wish them both well in their future endeavours'.

Smith added, 'I am humbled to think that six out of 10 members of our community put the Greens first or second on their ballot paper – thank you!

'This is a mandate to pursue the policies we took to the election and this time I'm hitting the ground running with the benefit of incumbency. Onwards and upwards'.

Urgent legal assistance funding needed says Law Council

The dire state of legal assistance funding in Australia has been highlighted as a matter of critical importance in the Law Council of Australia's 2019-20 pre-budget submission, with a boost of at least $310 million a year required to address critical gaps in the system.

Additional funding should also be provided to introduce Justice Impact Tests, improve resourcing of federal courts, and establish a National Justice Interpreter Scheme, said Law Council president Arthur Moses SC.

Funding abysmal

'Legal assistance funding in Australia is abvsmal and in need of urgent review.

Some of our most vulnerable people are slipping through the cracks, as the Law Council's Justice Project illustrates,' Mr Moses said.

'In the UK, Justice Impact Tests have proven to be a vital tool in facilitating the smoother development of laws and policies with downstream impacts on the justice system and ensuring adequate funding is provided for any repercussions'.

The Law Council's submission also calls for urgent additional funding of the federal courts, especially the Family Court of Australia and Federal Circuit Court of Australia.

For more information visit www.lawcouncil.asn.au.

When will Council explore consciousness?

Given it's been a year since the last revamp, Cr Cate Coorey suggests they receive feedback to 'let us know what is good and what could be better'.

Staff replied that such a website review would be 'timely' yet warned there are limitations with its Open Cities content management system (CMS). It should be noted too that the links to PDF attachments for the agendas don't work, meaning a long arduous navigation to find the corresponding file.

Human Rights

Meanwhile, acting mayor Michael Lyon has penned a Charter of Human Rights and Responsibilities for fellow councillors to consider.

It comes after former human rights professor Gillian Triggs addressed a Mullumbimby audience with her speech 'It's time for an Australian Bill of Rights'. Can it be done? In short, staff replied with 'Council is unable to exceed the role provided for it pursuant to the Local Government Act 1993'. But such an aspiration can be 'supported', according to Section 223, 2(b) and (e), which outlines that Councils should consider 'social justice principles' in their decision making.

Code of conduct

Keen Council watchers will be holding their breath as councillors deal with a refreshed code of conduct policy this week. It's the sort of document that can either stop poor governance in its tracks, or be used as a weapon against hard working individuals who are associated with local government. Bring popcorn and cushions, it starts at 9am.

Greens-led Council neglect leads to old growth loss

Continued from page 1 two decades in a bid to save the tree-lined ridge, but has watched in dismay in recent years as it has been subdivided.

In some cases, this appears to run contrary to a 2010 ruling by the Land and Environment Court which required the protection of vegetation stands and associated fauna within and adjacent to the ridge line, which the court referred to as the 'shelter belt'.

This is part of what residents say is a broader erosion of old-growth vegetation at Tallowood, including allowing this vegetation to be included in small suburban lots rather than be included in the shelter belt, preventing public access to the ridgeline and going back on a commitment to pursue larger lots to protect koala habitat as part of the sixth stage of the development.

A Council spokesperson said the land along the ridge top was in fact a 'road reserve' and was owned by

'Some works have previously occurred in the reserve in terms of plantings for environmental reasons and as a shelter belt as required...' the spokesperson said.

'Other areas of vegetated land not zoned for residential purposes and backing onto the ridgeline are in private ownership and currently held by the developer of the Tallowood Ridge Estate.

'It is required to be managed for conservation purposes under the Tallowood estate masterplan.'

Together Party delivers its budget speech April 2

Leader of the newly formed federal political party Together, Mark Swivel, says they will launch their prebudget speech an hour before the government does theirs on Tuesday April 2.

Local Barefoot lawyer and Duskyesky choir MC Mark Swivel heads Together and says his 'Thought through and fully costed' budget will be announced at the Mullum Ex-Services, kicking off at 6.30pm.

The party will then tour to Coffs Harbour, Newcastle, North Sydney, Bondi and Marrickville.

Old Byron Hospital update

Paul Bibby

Byron Council will have to pay nearly half a million dollars in holding and administration costs when it officially takes ownership of the old Byron District Hospital site in the coming weeks, according to a staff report.

There was great celebration last December when the state government agreed to sell the 5,300sqm Shirley Street site to council for just $1, paving the way for it to become a hub for local community services.

But as council prepares to officially sign the contract of sale, it has emerged that the purchase will be somewhat more costly than some first thought.

In the staff report tabled for the upcoming Thursday meeting, council's legal counsel Ralph James says that 'holding costs of the site for the 2019/2020 financial year are estimated at $400,000 in addition to an estimate of $50,000 to fund the administrative establishment of the site and legal documents'.

A Council spokesperson said the majority of the cost was for security as 'it's an unoccupied building in the centre of town'.

They also said the costs were based on initial estimates that would be refined if the project progressed.

Recoup costs

Council is hoping to recoup these costs once the community hub is up and running, most likely by having at least one commercial tenant on the site paying rent at or near market rates.

Mr James notes that, in the interim, council could source the funds from its Holiday Park Reserve via an internal loan.

He also notes that there is currently a significant amount of contamination on the site, including asbestos sheets in the original building, lead based paint and radiated sand in the courtyard.

The costs of remediating the site, estimated to be $200,000, are expected to be funded by the NSW Health Administration Corporation as part of the sale.

Should council go ahead with the purchase within the next few weeks as expected, it will likely then move to reclassify the land from 'community' to 'operational' as this will allow a greater range of uses and opportunities to generate income.

A preliminary proposal for the site has already been developed by a group of locals led by local realtor Chris Hanley.

This proposal involves the creation of a community hub in which affordable rental accommodation is provided to organisations representing the welfare, health, education and cultural sectors.

It includes a business plan under which rents would be structured in three tiers, with Tier 1 being for commercial organisations and Tier 3 being a zerocost space for community projects.

Body positive warriors on your side

Exploring issues around body image, self esteem and eating disorders and providing ways to cope and understand these issues are the focus of the upcoming Future Dreamers clarity support evenings.

Future Dreamers is a women's collective which supports young women 12–25 and call themselves the 'ultimate girls club'.

Bianca Hill from Future Dreamers says, 'We have been hard at work to create a new special foundation for each evening that focuses on Body Positive Empowerment, with the additional support of eating disorder guidance for anyone else in need'.

Bianca is an anorexia survivor who is currently in remission and recognises the importance of creating a safe space where young women can relate, share their own stories/struggles, gain strength, and simply just come along and connect with others in ease, knowing they are not alone in their thoughts and feelings, or battles.

'We have been working with holistic practitioners within the community to create a place for connection and development in each and everyone's journey to becoming one with our bodies where we can heal, nourish and thrive,' she said.

Body acceptance

'We are opening up this evening to anyone within our community to join us on a journey to body acceptance and appreciation, within a loving safe space where you will join other community members with the same gratitude and desires in life. We encourage anyone who would like to share insights into their own path of selfappreciation and body love with others to absolutely come and partake.'

Held first Monday of the month

The ocean is a way of life for Pete Ceglinksi and it was the hard realisation that human over-consumption and waste mismanagement was killing what he calls nature's best jewel.

That prompted his buddy Andrew Turton and Pete to quit their jobs to create a Seabin, a receptacle that cleans the oceans, collecting trash, oil, fuel and detergents.

Pete's background of product design, combined with ten years of boat building for high end racing yacht teams, proved invaluable for the development of the Seabin Project and its educational programs.

Along with the development of the Seabin Project as a business, Pete is heavily involved in the technical design and development of the products.

V5 Seabin, a floating debris interception device designed to be installed in the water of marinas, yacht clubs, ports and any water body with a calm environment and services available.

The Seabin can catch an estimated 1.5 kgs of floating debris per day (depending on weather and debris volumes) including microplastics down to 2mm small.

The Seabin is installed in a specific debris problem areas in the marina on a floating dock.

This strategic positioning enables the wind and the currents to push the debris directly to the Seabin.

Water is sucked in from the surface and passes through a catch bag in side the Seabin, with a submersible water pump capable of displacing 25.000 Lph (liters per hour), plugged directly into 110/220 V outlet. The water is then pumped back into the marina leaving litter and debris trapped in the catch bag.

The catch bag can hold up to 20kgs of rubbish.

April 4 Byron event

The Seabin Foundation, an Australian registered not-for-profit organisation, in association with clothing brand Patagonia, is presenting the Summit to Sea event at the Byron Theatre on April 4 from 5pm.

It's described as a 'conservation conference from the top down'.

Conservation comes in many forms and even from where you least expect it, says Pete.

'Negative impact is fuelling legislative change and a Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) program is becoming a staple in a competitive and increasingly transparent economy'.

'The Summit to Sea will be showcasing conservation efforts from all sectors and how inspiration, positivity and innovation can fast track progress in conservation.

'The summit will have 16 speakers presenting in a TEDx style format with live music, coffee, dinner and some amazing raffle prizes.

'All proceeds on the night will go towards Seabin Foundation for their Education, Science and Research programs.

'Some of the speakers include Delta Kay, Pete Ceglinski, Dave Rastovich, Sophie Hutchinson, Julia Reisser (Minderoo Foundation) and Kael Hudson, to name a few'.

Car makers call for vital safety check

SPONSORED CONTENT

AR makers have called on vehicle owners to urgently check if their vehicles are affected by the Takata airbag recall saying they risked serious harm by failing to make a simple check.

The faulty Takata airbags have the potential to seriously injure or even kill vehicle drivers and passengers.

There have been 24 reported deaths and more than 300 reported injuries globally attributed to the faulty airbags.

Federal Chamber of Automotive Industries chief executive Tony Weber said Australians had checked the recall status of more than seven million vehicles on the automotive industry's Takata Airbag recall website www.ismyairbagsafe.com.au since it was launched in July 2018.

This had helped vehicle owners identify over one million vehicles that were affected by the recall and needed to be taken to dealerships for the replacement of faulty airbags.

"Our roads are busy with people travelling with their families," Mr Weber said.

"We plead with vehicle owners to urgently check the status of their vehicle. It's simple and free - just go to the website and enter your vehicle's registration plate number and state or territory."

"If your vehicle is affected, you can make arrangements with your vehicle brand's local dealership to have the faulty airbag replaced."

Mr Weber said car makers had replaced the airbags in more than two million vehicles. "The industry has made significant progress.

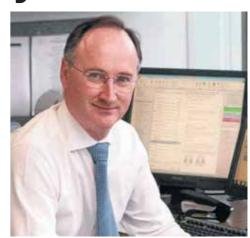

"But there are still approximately one million vehicles to be rectified. These vehicles are located throughout Australia.

"They are in every state and territory, every city, every regional town and every post code. They are fleet vehicles, business vehicles and family vehicles," Mr Weber said.

In addition to checking the status of their vehicles, Mr Weber said it was essential vehicle owners immediately followed-up any communication they received directly from their vehicle's manufacturer.

"Don't ignore the communication, don't put it to one side and don't forget to make a simple service booking."

Surprise! West Byron DA before the planning panel

Despite repeatedly expressing overwhelming opposition to the proposed West Byron urban and commercial development over sensitive wetlands just west of Byron Bay, the planning panel tasked with determining it have called another public meeting.

Everyone is invited to the Byron Theatre on Monday April 8 from 3pm to express their views on the proposal, which includes 282 residential lots and associated vegetation removal, a massive amount of earthworks and habitat destruction over multiple stages.

To register to speak, contact the Planning Panels secretariat before 4pm on April 4 on (02) 8217 2060 or email enquiry@planning-panels.nsw.gov.au.

Organisers of Byron Harmony Day Festival met last week over lunch to plan for next month's April 27 event at Mullumbimby Civic Hall from 11 am till 9pm.

Harmony Day is where residents and visitors from around the world share their cultural food, practice English language skills, learn about other cultures in the region and gain support in accessing programs and services which provide assistance to new arrivals. There will be a stellar lineup of culturally diverse music, dance, food, market stalls, workshops and children's activities in a very family friendly atmosphere.

Serious head injury for boy after fall from Cape Byron

A 15-year-old was winched to safety from Cape Byron with critical head injuries at around 2pm on Saturday.

It's the third rescue Brunswick Volunteer Rescue Crew say they have undertaken in the last few months at Cape Byron. Police say the boy fell after he and another young man were attempting to walk around the headland to Wategos. Medical crew and the patient were winched out from the base of the cliff and flown to Gold Coast University Hospital.

Difficult to negotiate

Rescuers said, while it might appear easy to climb from the bottom, the rock soon gives way to gravel and shale and even trained volunteers find it difficult to negotiate, even at the end of a safety rope and wearing a harness.

Airbnb survey released by SCU

An Airbnb survey on the impact of holiday letting on Byron Bay has been released, with key findings indicating that while there was increased income for Airbnb hosts, increased employment opportunities for locals and increased local tax revenue, the negative impacts included reduced availability of affordable housing for residents, increased traffic and parking congestion, increased waste management problems and increased infrastructure costs.

The aims of the project, according to its authors, were to 'profile the nature of Airbnb in the Byron Shire, ie to determine the size main attributes and development patterns of Airbnb'.

Community perspectives

Additionally the report attempts to 'describe, critically analyse and explore community perspectives on the perceived positive and negative impacts of Airbnb within the Shire, in order to inform specific and locally appropriate solutions'.

Another key finding, say the authors, were that 'most respondents preferred a model which involved onsite management for any shortterm holiday lettings (STHL)' respondents wanted "No restriction" on rentals of STHL properties with onsite management. That is, hosts could operate 365 day per year.

'However, for STHL rentals without on-site management, 39 per cent of respondents favoured rentals capped at '0 days' (such rentals not allowed at all) while 27 per cent supported a cap of "Less than 90 days per year".

'Most respondents (including Airbnb hosts) felt that STHL needs to be better regulated. Furthermore, the majority of respondents agreed with the need for greater public information on Airbnb-related issues within the Byron Shire'.

The project team comprises Dr Deborah (project leader), Dr Sabine Muschter, Dr Tania von der Heidt and Dr Rodney Caldicott.

Man charged over alleged domestic abuse

Five additional charges have been laid against a 46-yearold Ballina man by detectives investigating a series of serious alleged sexual and physical assaults of two women in the region.

In November 2018, detectives from Richmond Police District established Strike Force Addiscombe to investigate the historic serious domestic abuse of a number of women in the local area.

Strike force detectives arrested and charged the man last month.

He remains before the courts and was refused bail.

Compliance needs improving, says former councillor

Hans Lovejoy

Yippee - councillors appear to be taking more interest in unauthorised building compliance, which is of course a core responsibility when it comes to liability and equity.

Yet former councillor Duncan Dey has told The Echo that his tip off of an unauthorinstances where compliance is dropped in favour of encouraging DA approval in 'poorly located' areas.

Additionally, he says of a recent compliance report to councillors: 'There is no report on the rate of success or satisfaction for the public raising the matter, or for those responding to it'. The data in the staff report implies all CRMs get dealt with, he says.

Council staff recently reminded residents about the 'serious consequences of unlawful building works' though a press release, claiming they had won a court case 'concerning the conversion of a garage into a habitable dwelling without development consent'.

Dey provided two instances of questionable compliance investigations.

'The cases I know of are about illegal dwellings that I complained about in 2016.

'One was a shed that had been tarted up and rented.

'It was bolted to a giant eucalyptus that started looking sick and could have dropped branches. "Lives at immediate risk" are top priority 1.1 on Council's list.

'The dwelling was vacated after a Council order in June 2017 to return the building to its former shed status. Sadly, that order was later lifted after pleas by the owner and on the basis that a Development Application would be lodged to legalise that building, along with a second illegal dwelling on the property.

'The DA was lodged in 2018 to legalise the second dwelling, as a dual occupancy. The DA ignored the shed. I do not understand why its return to a shed had to await the DA. This building should be decommissioned, independent of the outcome of the DA'.

Dual occupancy

'The second 'case' is that second "dual occupancy" dwelling on the same property'. He says despite sending details and pictures and asking 'Council to stop construction until approvals have been granted', construction did not stop. 'A DA now seeks to legalise the building, despite it being poorly located and non-compliant with bushfire requirements, among many other [potentially] fatal non-compliances'.

The Echo asked Council staff for comment on the matters, but they declined to

COLLINS HUME ACCOUNTANTS

'I love working with people and helping them achieve their goals. Understanding the financial side of a business is something that doesn't come easily for everyone. I love being able to interpret financials into information that business owners can easily grasp', says Kelly.

Kelly obtained her B Business (Accounting and Business Law) from Southern Cross University and started in public practice while studying for her degree in 2000. She joined Collins Hume in 2017 and says it is the firm's commitment to helping community that she admires. 'We often speak to our clients about work/life balance and that is a focus at Collins Hume

Kelly will be presenting Collins Hume's popular Better Business Workshop on 15 May to educate business owners and has a particular passion for assisting women to achieve in business.

Kelly acknowledges that it can be daunting for young women to enter into the world of accounting and business advising but says 'the industry has so much to offer and the female perspective on business is so valuable.' She savs 'You'll never know what's possible until you try, so go for your dreams and never give up!'

Mullum theft hits local business

Flash Computers in Mullumbimby was robbed several weeks ago and is another on the list of what appear to be a spate of professional burglaries in the region.

A 'cat burglar' robbed the Ocean Shores shopping centre last month.

Ben Buob from Flash Computers said, 'The police have said it was likely a Gold Coast crew'.

'They jimmied the lock, cut the power to turn off the alarm system and they took all of the surveillance footage. They didn't trash the joint and really seemed to know what they were doing.'

The thieves broke into the business between 10pm and 6am on Monday March 4 through the front door and took stock including mobile phones, computers and laptops leaving around $60 of change in the till.

'I'm about $20,000 out of pocket,' said Ben.

'The worst thing is they took customers' computers that had their personal photos and documents on them.'

Ben has now replaced all his customers' stolen computers with new ones and has installed a new state of the art security system at the shop.

While Ben has registered the serial numbers of his stolen stock with pawn shops on the Gold Coast, nothing has shown up.

Slow recovery

'I'm recovering bit by bit,' he said but the insurance company is refusing to make good and the case is currently sitting with the Ombudsman.

inGrained Foundation offers not-for-profit grants

Local charities are invited to take part in a grants round by the local inGrained Foundation.

Founded as a separate not-for-profit by Stone & Wood in 2018, the inGrained Foundation 'works to attract, generate and direct donations to grassroots Northern Rivers charities to assist capacity-building in the region'. After donating over $750,000 to charities since 2013, the local brewery calls the foundation the 'next step' in its community program.

Stone & Wood's Lizzy Keen says, after their fundraising golf day on March 8 raised over $10,000 worth of donations, that the Northern Rivers Large Grants Program 2019 invites Northern Rivers social and environmental not-for-profits with DGR status to apply for a grant between $15,000 and $30,000. 'With a total grant pool of $60,000, the Foundation will award up to four grants in total, in May'.

InGrained Foundation board member Jasmin Daly said the Grants Program is designed to create connection and help the community to strengthen its local impact.

'We're asking all applicants to address how their project 'creates connection' because we feel that regardless of the need, cultivating a connected community as an outcome is at the heart of creating meaningful change,' Miss Daly said.

John Pilger speaks April 10

One of the world's most acclaimed independent journalists and documentary film-makers, John Pilger, will be speaking and taking questions on April 10 from 7 pm, at the Cavanbah Sports Centre in Byron Bay.

The evening is entitled: 'Breaking the silence: an evening's Q&A with John Pilger on propaganda inside the Australian bubble: false enemies, real threats and heroes unsung'.

Mainstream media

Organisers say Pilger will offer his insights on mainstream corporate media, particularly when it comes to exposing abuses of power.

'Pilger will cover a range of current global and regional issues, from the situation in Venezuela, the threat of nuclear war with China, the Middle East and the continued persecution of his friend, Julian Assange'.

'He is a strong and compassionate advocate for indigenous rights, peace and fair economics. Pilger is a reasoned, articulate voice with a wealth of inside knowledge of world affairs'.

The Byron Shire Echo Volume 33 #42 • March 27, 2019

Trend bucked, again

Congratulations Rupert Murdoch, Alan Jones, Gina Rinehart and their army of developers, bureaucrats and sycophants who were re-elected to rule over NSW last Saturday.

The seat of Ballina (Byron and Ballina Shires) was an exception however - Greens MP Tamara Smith was re-elected, with a slight majority.

Booth by booth, many towns and country halls in the Ballina electorate bucked the trend of most of NSW.

After preferences, the Nationals claimed around 40 per cent while the combined Greens and Labor vote (along with minor parties) claimed 60 per cent.

And unlike many other regions, the Ballina electorate did not have the choice to vote for a One Nation or hard right wing

The Greens candidate had the advantage of being an incumbent MP – familiarity is everything.

Ms Smith's re-election also sends a signal to Byron councillors, who are led by the 'progressive' Greens block under acting mayor Michael Lyon.

Ms Smith and councillors have been at odds over the way development is being carried out in Byron Bay.

During the election campaign, Ms Smith was the only major candidate calling for a halt to major developments, especially the bypass and bus interchange. The bus interchange is slated for the rail corridor and comes without any community consultation. Affected residents are now calling for an inquiry into the process that led to it, which is understandable given how questionable it has been. And moving two markets at the Butler Street to a yet-to-be found location until the road works are completed is poor planning and policy on the run.

Other issues that may have helped her over the line for Byron Shire voters include a total opposition to the contentious West Byron urban development, which is slated to be opposite the Arts and Industry Estate on Ewingsdale Road. While Nationals candidate Ben Franklin made noises of concern, it was clear that his party is supportive of ruining a sensitive wetland and estuary – essentially the lungs of Byron – to appease a handful of wealthy speculating developers.

Holiday letting probably played a part in the win, as did spiralling energy costs and lack of renewables projects under this government. In the end, Franklin failed to cut through with the message that he's a good guy in a terrible government.

Remarkably, the huge amount of cash he lobbed at the electorate at the last minute failed to materialise into winning votes. In most places, it would. But this is a highly active politically aware region and its inhabitants aren't fooled by political spin, platitudes and a trunkful of cash. In other words, policy matters, and the electorate (60/40) would prefer a government that looked after its citizens and planet rather than its donors.

In that regard, this electorate is becoming more ideologically distant from much of regional NSW, Sydney and Australia. Hans Lovejoy, editor cott Morrison would have been happier and clappier than usual when he went to his Horizon Pentecostalist Church last Sunday.

Morrison soft pedals on Hanson

The Prime Minister had almost as much riding on the NSW election as did Gladys Berejiklian.

But where Berejiklian boasted that she was incredibly proud about everything, but also incredibly humble (although she didn't look it), ScoMo was just incredibly relieved.

A few weeks ago, Malcolm Turnbull advised him to call an early federal election to give Berejiklian clear air for her fixed term poll - in effect to put down his own moribund regime to save a more viable government in Macquarie Street.

Morrison declined; he was not planning to give up just yet. But a loss in NSW, his home state, would have been a disaster. Instead, his captain's pick has for once been vindicated - and in a way which may even encourage his own near suicidal followers.

Turnbull's reasoning was that following the Victorian wipeout the same backlash would prevail north of the Murray - the resentment over his expulsion would continue. But it appeared that it didn't; allowing Morrison to dare to hope that the Turnbull effect, or the leadership churn, or whatever you choose to call it, has run its course.

Indeed the only Liberal seat definitely lost on Saturday was Coogee – the only seat in which Turnbull campaigned. And so just perhaps the marginals in NSW at least could be saved – there was even the delirious fantasy that he could pick up a couple from Labor.

Of course this overlooks the fact that Bill Shorten was not expecting to win a lot of seats in NSW – the real prospects are in Victoria, Queensland and Western Australia. But hey, a win's a win, savour it while you may.

But the real worry for Shorten is not the result, but how it came about - largely through preferences. In past elections, the vote for minor parties and independents is generally regarded as a protest vote - most of the anti-government swing comes back to the majors.

This is how pollsters calculate the two party preferred vote; they look at what happened in the past and extrapolate to the future.

But last weekend the preferences did not come back - a large proportion of them remained with the outliers.

And if this trend persists in the general election in May, Labor will not be the shoo-in most currently assume, even though the optional preferential system in NSW will give way to compulsory preferences in the national poll.

The point of the preferential system is not necessarily to deliver the most popular candidate, but to avoid the most disliked. So if you can't get your first choice, you can at least try to get rid of your most loathed.

As always, ScoMo's protestations have absolutely nothing about principle and very little about truth. Mungo MacCallum 🥖

And this is why Scott Morrison is being disingenuous about whether his Liberal Party will actually put One Nation at the back of the pack in his how to vote card.

Of course the card is not compulsory – it is entirely up to the individual voter how to select preferences. But the party how to vote cards are more than an incentive: they are a clear indication of the party's priorities.

If, as Michael McCormack and many of his fellow Nationals apparently believe, the Greens, with their espousal of renewable energy rather than fossil fuels, are more dangerous than the strident and divisive anti-Muslim and anti-Asian agenda of Pauline Hanson, they are perfectly entitled to put their how to vote cards where their mouths are. Every man for himself.

But there may well be consequences the Nats may hold on to a couple of seats in Queensland, but risk losing many more coalition seats around the rest of the country. After all, that's what happened in Western Australia, and given the mood in Victoria after that state election, it could easily happen again.

And this is why ScoMo is ducking and weaving, obfuscating and misleading. He says there will be no deals with

One Nation - although he and his ministers have connived in many ways to massage otherwise unpopular legislation through the senate.

He will not, he insists virtuously, do any formal preference swaps.

But he will not confine them to the bottom of the pile - there may be more obnoxious people yet to nominate. The decision will be taken in due time.

But by whom? By him, through a captain's pick – the kind of call John Howard did in 1996, or Bill Shorten has already done this year? Or by the Liberal federal organisation? Or the state organisations? Or by the candidates themselves? Morrison will not say.

And vitally, he will not guarantee that they will be placed below Labor, which is what actually matters.

Morrison soft pedals on Hanson she has never pushed racism when she has talked to him, he avers. Well, surprise, surprise - he is well insulated in his Canberra bubble.

But perhaps, in the real world, he has heard rumours that she has talked racism for years, in the parliament, in the media - in every platform she can find.

As always, ScoMo's protestations have absolutely nothing about principle and very little about truth. There is more wink wink, nudge nudge than fair

And there are times when preferences can be the last refuge of a scoundrel.

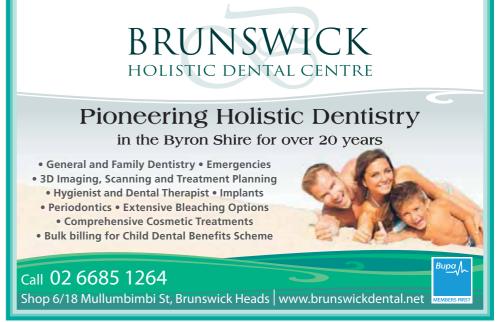

Back in the old days in the Northern Territory, there were persistent stories that so called advisers appointed by the long-running Country-Liberal government were sent out to remote communities to help them grapple with

When confronted by intending Labor voters they devised a simple formula: "You don't like this CLP man? Well, you only give him one vote. Write 1 in the square beside his name. You like the next man a little bit? Give him two votes. But you really want the Labor man? Give him three votes."

For many years - decades in fact - it

But of course Scott Morrison would never stoop to such chicanery - if only because he could never get away with it. But these are desperate times - perhaps it could be worth a try...

Byron's credentials

Byron Bay is an amazing place. Beautiful nature and wildlife on land and in the ocean. A centre of environmental awareness - or so I thought.

I'm over here from NZ for a month and in the 27 days I've been here, I haven't seen a single electric vehicle (EV). Not even one. Where are all the entry level Nissan Leafs and eNV200s?

Every day I see nose to tail traffic coming into Byron Bay CBD and not even one of them is electric. Are all these cars doing more than 140kms a day? That distance is easily achievable in a basic EV.

What I do see are hundreds of big, grunty off-roaders with snorkels spewing carbon monoxide.

Is it an unwritten rule that when parked, even if the windows are down, people have to leave the engine running all the time? I'm confused.

Wrong way, go back

I am alarmed by the council ads informing us that they are seeking tenders from four developers for their proposals for the redevelopment of the old eight hectare South Byron Sewerage Treatment Plant.

By leaving it up to developers to decide what they want for the site, council has the whole process around the wrong way.

The first step should have been to identify the most environmentally significant areas, such as the old sewerage ponds that are now important wetlands and the Endangered Ecological Communities, and socially important areas, such as the walking/bicycle track, which need to be retained under community ownership and management.

Then council should have assessed what the community wants for the site. Allowing for community open space is an option, or even purchase by the NPWS for addition to the Arakwal National Park.

Instead Council undertook a secretive expression of interest process that didn't specify land use or development requirements for the site and was open to all viable proposals.

Even after they shortlisted four developers they refused to tell us what they proposed.

Now they have moved to a tender process, and it is only after they have selected their preferred tender that they will tell the community what development they have decided on.

This is an outrageous process for important community land, and is another example of contempt for due environmental protection and community consultation by this Council.

Dirty smelly toilets

■ Please Council, can you remedy the disgusting toilets in Brunswick Heads? Particularly those at Banner park.

We often need to visit these toilets with our four year old grandson and he is reluctant to use them; he says 'they are really smelly and I don't like to go into them.'

Also there is no lock on the female toilet door.

They need proper maintenance and thorough cleaning, not a cursory hosing now and then. Please give them the attention they need.

> David Ashton Mullumbimby

Ed Note: Reflections Holiday Parks manages Banner Park toilets, not Council.

■ The mark of a good council is the state of the public toilets. I'm sure this has been said by someone famous, and Bill Rawlinson's letter last week illustrated the mark of Byron Council clearly.

Unfortunately, it's not just the Brunswick sports ground toilets which bear the stench of inadequate maintenance. It's all the Brunswick toilets! I can't even remember when there was an adequate lock on the mens' by the river, and the yellow stains in the bowls must be nightmare stuff for young kids caught short.

Why is it that here in Australia we have the proverbial 'blind spot' in our civic and personal awareness around dunnies? How is it that I can travel Europe and never see a dirty dunny? And why are our businesses saddled with the extra maintenance that comes about due to the public opting for their convenience because they are scared of catching something in the council crapper?

The council is holding talks about the future of tourism in the Shire. Subject one should be a strategy that makes our dunnies the pride of the Shire. Imagine dunnies that welcome people rather than terrify them, dunnies that ensures a fragrant rather than a fetid moment for sitters and standers.

Bill has done what we are all asked to do. He has been to council, talked to a councillor, talked to the contractor, all to no avail. Seems any such public spirited action only ends up in deeper shit.

Since Bill complained we've gone from daily hoseouts at the sports ground john, to weekly - WTF?

Councillors, you all have the luxury of a home dunny and I'm sure you value your clean seat. What an opportunity to invest in happier tourists, less grumpy residents, and a bit of Byron brand management.

Imagine if we went to Byron for a week and our best memory was the dunnies!

Hansen support

Perhaps Patricia Warren will forgive some scepticism about the intended effect of the proposed Banking System Report (Separation of Banks) bill 2019. It's just that I'm unaccustomed to finding myself in accord with Senator Hansen.

It's a strange feeling, however, if the sole intention of the bill is to separate retail and commercial banking from wholesale and investment banking then, my lips can scarcely frame the words, it sounds like a good idea.

In 1933, in the wake of the 1929 stock market crash and the Great Depression, US Congress enacted the

All went well until 1999 when Bill Clinton signed a bill repealing the Glass-Steagal provisions which many people believe led directly to the global financial crisis just nine years later. So the separation would seem to be a good thing.

Reasons given for the repeal, according to Wikipedia, included the 'repeal would "enhance the stability of our financial services system" by permitting financial firms to "diversify their product offerings and thus their sources of revenue" and make financial firms "better equipped to compete in global financial markets".

The trouble was that their diversified product offerings and sources of revenue turned out to be disguised iunk.

These reasons will, no doubt, also be trundled out by those opposing the Separation of Banks bill now.

Illegal development

Earlier this month a Friday Hut Rd developer lost his appeal over Council's refusal of his development application (DA). As the hearing was held in Ballina and I was a registered objector I attended in order to look over the shoulders of Council's lawyers, as it were.

They ran it in a different way than I would have, but the Commissioner's judgement made it clear that he'd seen what I would have explicitly drawn his attention to: that things weren't quite as they were purported to be.

The purpose of this letter, however, is to draw attention to the compliance issue. Though the developer failed to get consent, his unauthorised building remains, and his unauthorised use of other approved buildings will no doubt continue. So what happens next? Nothing, I suspect.

In February, Council staff presented their annual Compliance Priorities Program; an overview of what Council staff have been doing and what they propose to continue doing. The report gives an apparently impressive picture that seems to cover all bases, but I have deep misgivings about mixing up complaints about dogshit, or illegal camping, with illegal development matters.

Apparently there were 819 complaints last year about 'illegal development', with no explanation or breakdown.

What we were told was that there had been one successful prosecution that resulted in a fine of $1,500! Wow, what a deterrent! Justice seen to be done.

What we were next told was that over 700 of these complaints had been 'completed'. Again no explanation or breakdown. Then we were informed that this 700-odd figure was partly comprised of an unspecified number of carry-overs from the previous year – again no explanation or breakdown.

In public access I suggested that councillors would be, not just negligent but willfully so, to accept this aspect of the report as okay without requiring further information. I've known brick walls to be more responsive than this lot, so I shouldn't have been surprised that they voted to simply accept said report, with a pathetic amendment by Cate Coorey to the effect that if any councillors had any problems with the matter they could raise them at the next (so-called) strategic planning workshop.

She raised this amendment in a regretful tone that seemed to contain an inbuilt apology for daring to question staff or daring to support something I suggested.

The purpose of this letter is to suggest that the Friday

Hut Rd matter is now to be counted as 'completed' even though the situation on the ground remains precisely the same as it was.

It's the process you go through that counts, apparently, not the outcome.

Cats

Tis true that habitat destruction is the main threat to native wildlife, but feral cats cause enormous damage too.

I love cats, I think they are beautiful, affectionate animals, but when my last cat died I decided I would rather have birds in the garden than a cat in the house.

In terms of the environment it would be better if well meaning organisations stopped rehoming cats. True, most damage is done by cats in the bush, but cats concentrated in suburban areas have a similarly concentrated effect.

I was amused to see the 'serious consequences' of an illegal dwelling which was constructed in a garage by a builder.

That we would be in favour of freedom of speech, but only so long as we agree with what others are saying - or for that matter, that we only say what others will agree with – is antithetical to the nature of free speech.

Readers who skim this letter without much reflection might conclude that I'm promoting hate speech, but that's wrong. Reading Mandy's views, I empathise with the outrage she feels at all those who promote hatred and bigotry. Where we disagree is solely in their right to express it, and I write in defence of that right (which is actually absent in Australia).

Whereas Mandy's view is that 'We need to shut them down', my own view is that we need to speak out against them – and here I support Mandy entirely. A proper defence of freedom of speech deserves much more argument than can be expressed here, but a good starting point might be John Stuart Mill's On Liberty, a classic treatise on the subject: https://socialsciences.mcmaster.ca/econ/ ugcm/3ll3/mill/liberty.pdf

Cycle safety

In reply to Robin Harrison's comments on bicycle safety (Letters March 20). I submit the current updated research supporting the wearing of bicycle helmets.

In the USA the 2015 Department of Transportation statistical survey, a study of bicycle injuries (including 818 deaths), came to the conclusion that 'bicycle lanes and helmets' may reduce the risk of death.

Almost 75 per cent of fatal crashes involved a head injury, and 97 per cent of cyclists who died were not wearing a helmet.

An Australian study, by the University of NSW in 2016 came to the same conclusions. The worldwide study of more than 64,000 cyclists, showed cycle helmet use reduced the risk of fatal head injury by 65 per cent.

I do agree that the number of participating cyclists decreased in the 90s when helmet laws were introduced. But we, as cyclists, need to remember cycling on our terrible roads is a dangerous activity.

We need many more designated bicycle lanes, but please obey the law (and protect your head) by wearing an approved helmet. It's been proven to work.

Climate voices

■ Last week we attended one of the student rallies to urge action on global warming. As a retired teacher we were there to show our support but remained in the background as it was a day for students to make themselves heard.

The atmosphere was inspiring and very positive as our youth led a colourful march up the side of the main street in Byron from one park to another.

Adolescent speakers then addressed their peers and a junior school band performed with original material to great applause.

It was wonderful to see our youth exercising their democratic rights and airing their concerns positively and peacefully, realising how small actions, when combined, can lead to global solidarity among their peers.

Their involvement will stay with them far longer than any civic studies lessons in the classroom.

■ March 16 2019 was a day I felt even more deeply the truth of the words spoken at the Student Strike for Climate in Byron Bay and elsewhere:

'I want you to panic'. I read something I hoped I would never see in print. The United Nations saying that Arctic temperatures will rise by 3-5 degrees celcius by mid-century and that there is nothing that we can do to stop it (Guardian March 13).

I automatically think of the hundreds of thousands of square kilometres of methane contained within the permafrost in the Artic and tipping points not adequately included in the IPCC (Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change) analysis, probably due to political interference.

Paddle fun and challenges down the Bruns River ndraiser for Brunswick Marine Rescue, Surf Life Saving Club & Visitor Centre

MULLUM2BRUNS PADDLE 10 years, still paddling!

The Paddle turns 10 this year!

Scott Waddell and Barry 'Rex' Stewart, two surf lifesavers from the Sunshine Coast, have been there every year and have a mate's agreement to 'do it forever'.

Rex, 54, was born and bred in Mullumbimby and moved to the Sunshine Coast about 8 years ago. He has been paddling 20 years - 'a late bloomer' he laughs - and usually competes in the single paddle challenge, hitting the finish line in around 50 mins. In 2012 Scott was inspired to replicate a similar event on the Sunshine Coast with the 17km Maroochy River Paddle and, although successful, he explains 'it just doesn't have the same close-knit community vibe as the Mullum2Bruns'.

'It's become an annual catch up with family and old friends and we love supporting the local businesses. And of course, it's also a fundraiser for three worthy organisations - Marine Rescue, Bruns Visitor Centre and the Surf Club. I always donate a bit extra, 'cause that's what it's all about', says Mr Waddell.

Although Rex and Scott are competitive paddlers, the majority of event participants are not.

'Most people enter the Fun Paddle section, it's very social and a fabulous, scenic river experience' says event co-ordinator, Kevin Fitzgerald. 'Afterwards everyone is invited to the spectacular Dragon Boat flotilla, live music, food and family friendly activities at the Terrace Park in Brunswick Heads.'

The event kicks off at 9:30am on Sunday 26 May. Earlybird registration is now open, until 15 April at www.mullum2brunspaddle.com.au

Weather and climate: what's the difference and does it really matter?

Aslan Shand

There are several letters supporting the recent student climate march in our letters pages this week. There is also a letter that denies climate change is taking place.

So here's a quick guide to the difference between the weather and the climate – and it is this difference (distinction) that is key to understanding why and how climate change is taking place.

Weather v climate

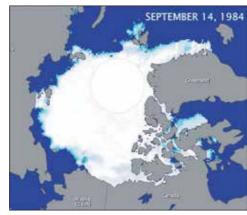

Weather is the day-to-day changes in the atmosphere and includes extreme, unusual weather events.

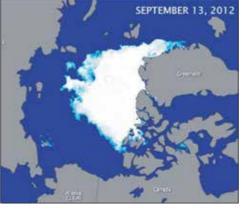

Climate is the weather over a long period of time. A few single outlying weather events are just that – weather events.

Therefore, to determine if climate change is actually taking place we need to look at the overall change in weather patterns over time. It is looking at these weather patterns which makes it clear that the atmosphere 'on average' and 'over time' is changing.

So the fact that there were two extreme weather events in 1828 and 1896, as pointed out by our climate change denying letter writer, does not mean that climate change is not happening. It is the increase in average temperature in Australia (and around the world), particularly since 1950, which tells us that climate change is taking place.

This is also supported by a range of other science such as ice core analysis. The science is not saying that the climate

A comparison of Arctic ice minimum in 1984 and 2012 demonstrating the reduction in Arctic ice over time. Image assembled from NASA Earth Observatory images by Jesse Allen hasn't been hotter or colder than it is today – the science is telling us that the climate is changing and at a faster rate than it normally does.

Dinosaur death

Again it is not to say that there haven't been extreme climate changes. Take for example the extinction of the dinosaur. One theory is that the dinosaurs died out as a result of the climate changing rapidly as a result of a meteor hitting the Earth. They died out because it happened so quickly that they couldn't adapt to the change in the climate.

So back to today – the science is clear, the average global temperatures have been rising at a faster rate than they have in millennia, as far as scientists can determine. Which means, there is significantly less time for species to adapt to the changing climate.

The result is we're in the middle of a mass extinction. That is, the rate at which species are becoming extinct is very rapid in terms of the Earth's evolutionay history (the first forms of life started around 3.7 billion years ago).

Let us help you gain a better quality of life...

Earth will continue

It is not that the Earth won't continue as a result of climate change; it is that the Earth won't continue to support humans and the species that exist today in the stable atmosphere that we have evolved to exist in.

We will experience a rapidly changing climate with more regular and extreme weather events and we will have to take action to reduce our impact that is changing the climate, adapt to this changed world, or become extinct ourselves.

says, 'we call it wanting

It's for this reason that Light Touch Solar & Electrical have launched a Community Solar Fund to help local community groups access solar power.

'There are so many community organisations that help to make the Northern Rivers special. We want to support more of these groups by reducing their energy expenses so they can continue to do the great work they do.

'Every cent they're not spending on electricity can go into the cause they are advocating for.'

Light Touch Solar design and installation team bringing clean energy to the Northern Rivers.

The team at Light Touch Solar also care deeply about the environment, so they have designed what they call the Light Touch Signature System, which delivers as much energy as possible back to the household, or business, and to the grid.

The Signature System is a masterpiece, comprised of the Light Touch choice of solar panels with micro inverters fitted to each panel, so that if one panel is in the shade it doesn't affect the performance of the others. And for those who wish to add storage, this system is then fitted with one of the best batteries on the market – the Tesla Powerwall.

"By investing in solar with us you are investing in the future"

For the technologically minded, that system translates to Winaico high-efficiency solar panels, Enphase IQ 7 Micro™ inverters and Tesla Powerwall battery; all fitted by a team of fully qualified CEC accredited electricians who can sort out any other electrical issues you have while they are there.

For every 100 solar systems they sell, Light Touch Solar & Electrical have committed to donate one Signature Solar System to a local community organisation. They currently have a target of 73 more purchases to enable them to donate their first system!

So if you've been thinking about solar for your home, or perhaps you run a business and you haven't taken advantage of the government's $20,000 tax write-off deduction, now is a great time to get on board and support your community, before the end of the financial year.

'I guess it's a bit like donating to a crowdfunding campaign, except that you also benefit from a state-of-the-art solar system, and heavily reduced power bills and CO₂ emissions for many years to come.

We do the community group's installations for free,' said Mr Hodgson.

Are we asking the wrong question?

Aslan Shand

For anyone who is yet to work it out, if you don't have enough water in a river – it collapses. Likewise if you don't have enough trees in a forest – it collapses. The result of this is that you have, as we have seen, enormous fish kills in the Murray-Darling and you have forests dying as is currently taking place in many of the heavily logged areas of state forest.

Changing the questions

So what can we do? Firstly, for farmers to have irrigation they need to have a healthy river, so the argument shouldn't be about how much water they can have to irrigate their crops. First and foremost it should be how much water does the river need to function at its healthiest capacity. Once you have a healthy river, only then can you talk about how much extra water there is available and how that can be distributed.

The same goes for logging our forests. First we need to say how much timber do we need to keep in our forests to ensure they and their supporting ecosystems are not just surviving, but thriving?

It is not until we answer that question that we have the right to say 'can we take any timber from this forest'. This should then be followed by 'and how do we do that in a way that doesn't damage the forest and the ecosystems that support it', and ultimately us (as humans) in the long term.

Turn it on its head

The reality is we currently approach the whole debate upside-down and back-tofront. We need to turn our thinking on its head and look at how we create healthy systems before we even think about what we can take from them.

This has been highlighted by North East Forest Alliance (NEFA) who are stating that that Timber NSW's claims of job losses due to the creation of the Great Koala National Park are inflated more than six fold and are insignificant compared to the 7,400 jobs they have shed in the past decade.

Koala's dying out

Koala populations have declined by more than 50 per cent in the last 20 years and the proposed Great Koala

National Park would contain the largest population of koalas left in NSW if it went

'For the survival of koalas it is essential that this park be created and rehabilitated to restore degraded koala habitat,' said NEFA spokesperson Dailan Pugh.

Inflated figures

'It is outrageous that Timber NSW is using grossly inflated employment and economic impacts as part of their scare campaign to stop koalas getting the protection they urgently need.

'The Department of Primary Industry's (DPI) own employment data indicate that the logging of the Great Koala National Park only supports some 300 direct and indirect jobs, far less than Timber NSW's claims of almost 2,000 jobs.

'The DPI (2018) North Coast NSW Private Native Forest Primary Processors Survey Report identified that the native timber primary processing sector on the NSW north coast (from Gosford to the Queensland border) employs some 1,284 people, with 288 of these jobs due to private property resources.

'As proposed by the National Parks Association (NPA) the Great Koala National Park encompasses 175,000 ha (19 per cent) of north-east NSW's 921,200ha of state forests, on a pro-rata basis this suggests that it accounts for some 190 of the native timber primary processing jobs.

'The use of multipliers is a contentious issue, though the DPI (2018) adopted an employment multiplier of 1.617 to account for production and consumption flow-on into the regional economy, meaning that 190 direct jobs would result

The more habitat that is lost for koalas the greater risk for disease and death. An image from the media campaign that is blitzing the North Coast in a total of 307 jobs in the regional economy.

Industry consolidation causing job losses

'It is not known how Timber NSW derived an estimate that the Great Koala National Park would result in the loss of almost 2,000 jobs, though by any measure this is a greatly inflated estimate and represents more jobs than would be lost if the whole of the north coast's public native forests were protected.

'Employment in the forestry sector is on a downward trajectory with ABARES (2018) identifying that 7,396 jobs have been lost in NSW in the past 10 years alone due to consolidation of processing into larger facilities with higher labour efficiencies, and restructuring of the sector.

'Timber NSW is not claiming dire consequences from their own far more significant job shedding.

'Any short term job losses will be rapidly replaced by alternative jobs generated in park management, environmental repair, increased tourism, and population growth which will in the medium term far surpass any job losses due to the Great Koala National Park,' Mr Pugh said.

Music breaking down borders and giving hope to refugees

here are many reasons why someone becomes a refugee; from war to oppressive governments and personal circumstances. Regardless of the reason, the result is a push into homelessness as people search for a better life.

In Afghanistan whole villages have pooled money to send a young boy onto the refugee trail and avoid him being conscripted by the Taliban. Families from Syria, left destitute from the civil war, trudge across countries seeking a safe future.

Nightly, hungry youths attempt border crossings to get to the 'promised land' of France, Germany or England.

On the road, children as young as ten travel on their own and are often beaten, robbed, traded as slaves and die. Corruption in the refugee camps means refugees are often left with nothing.

Beginnings

Having grown up in the hills of Nimbin valley, when he finished school Elijah Gentle set off on a backpacking holiday that eventually led him to volunteer at a refugee camp in Serbia.

It was here that he used his experience from playing and engaging in the music scene to set up music workshops. Some of the refugees were well known musicians in their own communities, giving Elijah the idea and drive to look at how he could help them record their music.

Raising money in Australia Elijah then returned to the camps to record their music. He travelled around Bosnia, Serbia, Macedonia, Greece and Lebanon with a friend, organising recording sessions with mostly itinerant refugee musicians. They were joined by a Danish filmmaker for part of the journey, who has made a documentary of the No Borders Music Project.

Bringing it together

Back in Australia collating, editing and marketing the recordings is proving to be the most expensive stage of the project. Any profit will be sent to the nominated families of the musicians.

Farook's story

One of the refugee musicians who has recorded with Elijah is Farook*, an Algerian Hip Hop artist.

'In Algeria he was involved in making a music video for an Algerian reggae group which criticised the Algerian government. Everyone involved in the project was pursued by the government,' said Elijah.

'The band escaped and Farook reached Bosnia unharmed, however other artists suffered at the hands of the Algerian government.'

After numerous attempts to reach Western Europe Farook resigned himself to making a career in Bosnia.

'He wrote a rap verse outlining some of his experiences seeking refuge, and together we made a hip hop beat on my laptop and recorded it in an apartment in Sarajevo,' explained Elijah.

Elijah is now looking for support to complete the No Borders Music Project and to release the CD later in the year at events in Byron Bav and Melbourne, accompanied by the documentary made by the danish filmmaker.

To hear more stories and meet some of the musicians, go to the No Borders Music Facebook page @nobordersmusik or support the project by going to the GoFundMe page at www.gofundme. com/no-borders-music. ★ Farook's name was

As a father I can't bring myself to put into words what that means. I have been reading on climate science for over ten years and it continues to be a gut wrenching experience.

For much of that time I have projected my angst onto the multi-billion-dollar climate-denial industry and vested interests. But I have come to realise that the only remaining obstacle to any remote chance of pulling back from the brink is to break our own emotional meta-silence.

This meta-silence is like a massive dam wall holding back unstoppable momentum in a way that we can't currently conceive. It requires us to walk towards our own intense feelings of sadness, anger and fear and create safety for others to do the same. Once this silence is broken, policy alignment, and the money, will follow at a blistering pace. No one can stop the voice of the people. The power is with us.

My deepest purpose now, as a father and a psychologist, is to support the breaking of this meta-silence. As one small offering I have set up a YouTube Channel at 'Climate Transformation' to deconstruct how we are conditioned into silence and how to break through and claim our unstoppable breathtaking power.

We need to feel our deep love for our earth home and our children, shake off our urban politeness, find our inner warrior and take charge.

> Tim Loughnan Ocean Shores

■ It is very sad that schools do not teach the fact that climate change has proven to be cyclic. Why are these accurate record breaking climate extremes, such as in 1828 when a blistering 53.9° was recorded in the west of NSW, completely ignored?

In January 1896 another 'furnace like' blast stretched across Australia from east to west and lasted for weeks. The death toll reached 437 people in the eastern states.

Newspaper reports show that in Bourke the heat for three consecutive days approached 120^f (48.9^c) and that also for 24 days straight was above 102^f. By Tuesday January 14, people were reported falling dead in the streets.

Also recorded in the early 1900s there was a similar climate pattern change. So it can definitely be seen that climate is cyclic.

Sadly now, students who have been brain washed by ignorant teachers, think that high temperatures have only been brought on by a coal powered industrial evolution.

These frenzied teachers who preach fire and brimstone and then lead their pupils out on the streets, especially during school hours, should be sacked.

It now does not surprise that the NAPLAN results are absolutely deplorable when teaching time is wasted on fiction and not fact.

Ed note: Weather – is the day-to-day changes in the atmosphere and includes extreme, unusual weather

Climate – is the weather over a long period of time eg 30 or 200 years. Outlying weather events are just that - weather events.

Climate change is the overall change in weather patterns over time. It is looking at these weather patterns which makes it clear that the atmosphere 'on average' and 'over time' is changing.

The fact that there were two weather events in 1828 and 1896 does not mean that climate change is not happening. It is the increase in average temperature in Australia (and around the world) especially since 1950 which tells us that climate change is taking place. See more p.17.

Crisis in Palestine

The humanitarian crisis in Palestine is such that imminent death due to starvation and disease currently threatens thousands of helpless civilians, half of them children, victims of Israeli actions and policies.

Israel doesn't care about the Palestinians, it wants to normalise and legitimise its illegal settlements and its military occupation of the West Bank and its siege of Gaza. It ignores UN Security Council resolutions and violates international law with impunity.

This crisis is allowed to degenerate endlessly and without interest from corporate media or western polities which have their own history of slaughter and ethnic cleansing akin to what's been ongoing in Palestine now for more than seventy years.

These days you don't have to go beyond the website of Israel's daily, haaretz. com, to find facts, analysis and opinions which are not permitted elsewhere in the western press, and to listen to the likes of Amira Hass or Miko Peled for insight into the nature of the slow motion genocide of Palestinians.

Israel is not a victim and its supporters do untold harm by seeking to silence critics and in trying to justify Israel's denial of the right of Palestinians' to a state of their own or equal rights within a one-state solution.

RISE & RESIST

Echo

Is turning up dead the only way to get a voice?

Duncan Dey

Byron Shire Council (BSC) staff used the phrase 'natural event' to describe the recent fish kill that saw thousands of fish die in Belongil Creek. How natural was it?

Belongil Estuary is an ICOLL (intermittently closing and opening lake or lagoon) that opens across a beach into the ocean. When catchment flow is low, the entrance closes.

When the entrance is closed the beach builds up, raising water levels in the estuary all the way back south of the Ewingsdale Road bridge. When levels there reach 1m AHD (just above high tide) council has permission to dig a channel through the sand berm of the beach and break the water out. As it flows, it washes a deeper cut in the berm and empties the estuary.

The community who benefit from the artificially lowered water levels includes farmers and residents who may otherwise be flooded in these extensive very low-lying areas of the catchment.

The community harmed by artificial openings are aquatic and can't lobby except by turning their bellies up in death. We need to listen to them and to rethink the opening strategy.

Time to re-think

WE ARE

Luckily, Byron Council is doing that right now and should have a draft Belongil Entrance Opening Strategy on public exhibition this year.

The fish kill that took place in March in the Belongil Creek. Photo Reid Waters

Not only is the estuary interfered with by artificial opening, but the catchment has been interfered with by clearing, by having huge areas made impervious to water, and by its floodplain being criss-crossed with channels which drain those flat low-lying areas.

The areas that were historically drained to facilitate farming and grazing of cattle would otherwise have remained wet for long periods and therefore unusable for pasture.

Some of the layers of soil in those low areas are Acid Sulphate (AS) soils.

Acid Sulphate soils are innocuous when permanently wet – as they were for thousands of years – but become highly acidic when dried out (especially when drying is for the first time in geological history).

These days they are dried out in long hot summer periods due to the artificially low water table. A subsequent first flush of rain brings acid runoff into the estuary, along with decomposing organic material that strips the water of its oxygen.

First question

Investigation of the recent fish kill needs to ask first whether an acid or low oxygen event occurred.

If the fish were killed only by 'iron bacteria' as stated by BSC, this was an unusual event.

Either way, we also need to reconsider whether flushing huge volumes out of the estuary for our convenience and leaving the fish with far less water depth in which to survive is 'best practice'.

Let's keep an eye out for the draft Opening Strategy and ask for it to be made as fish-friendly as possible.

Death by asbestosis: Mullum Hospital's last gasp – lest we forget

s you make your way down Left Bank Road in Mullumbimby there is, for all to see, a stark reminder and further evidence of one of the biggest corporate scandals this country has ever witnessed.

The Mullumbimby
Hospital is now shrouded in white plastic as it waits to be demolished. Symbolically, the last act of our dying hospital is to protect the community which it served since 1969 from the asbestos which caused its termination.

As the story of the crimes and deception of the James Hardie (JH) company fade from community consciousness (as they had hoped it would) our hospital's last gasp should remind us of how wicked some corporations can be. A reminder of the cost in lives and resources that companies like JH take from the Australian community.

James Hardie was the manufacturing company in Australia, later globally, that dominated the market for asbestos products following the Second World War. The iconic Australian fibro house which populated the suburbs througout the country during the postwar housing boom, was built with asbestoscement roofs, walls and fences. At the same time, James Hardie's asbestoscement pipes and asbestos lagging were woven through the industrial landscape.

Science was right

The deadly effects of asbestos on human health were known as early as the 1920s. Reliable, rigorous and consistent scientific evidence, available since the 1950s, shows that 93 per cent of all cases of mesothelioma (caused by asbestosis) are a direct result of asbestos exposure.

Like the tobacco industry, asbestos companies including JH used their significant resources to discredit and bury the science and press who reported the negative findings.

It is estimated that at least 10,000 Australians died of asbestosis between 1960 and 1990. Asbestos was banned from use in the 1990s but the disease can take up to 20 years from contamination to present as an illness (longer in some cases).

Estimates are that another 50,000 Australians will die from asbestos. Most don't know they have been exposed and are not sick – yet. 710 people died in 2017 of mesothelioma, from contamination that most likely occurred in the 1980s.

Defending the indefensible

When the first compensation case actually made it to court in 1975 JH defended the indefensible. With slick lawyers, out of court settlements and delaying tactics that ensured most claimants were dead before their day in court, these were David and Goliath struggles for justice that JH gloated over triumphantly. That was until the first conviction for negligence was successful in 1991 and then the fibro walls came tumbling down.

According to the Australian Asbestos Network many other work related court victories followed. By the beginning of this century the battleground moved from the workplace to the health damage caused by 'third wave' asbestos exposure in the home – what one lawyer called 'the urban nightmare'.

alled 'the urban nightma James Hardie twisted every which way to distance its current operations from its ongoing asbestos liabilities.

In 2001 the company established the Medical Research and Compensation Foundation (MRCF) with a total of $293 million in funds, saying that this fund would be able to meet all the future asbestos claims.

Offshore answer

James Hardie then relocated its company off-shore to Holland, leaving behind the compensation fund that has a massive financial shortfall.

The subsequent judicial inquiry in NSW in 2004, the Jackson Inquiry, was critical of JH's actions and, after great public and governmental pressure, the company was forced to finalise a new compensation deal. The Carr government in NSW secured a new deal but it took until 2007 for that agreement to be reached. In the end JH guaranteed a fund of $4 billion to cover its future obligations to asbestos victims.

Suffocating death

There is no cure for mesothelioma which is a type of cancer that destroys the lungs though it is not lung cancer. Apart from the decades it can take from contamination to the first symptoms it then often takes years from diagnosis to death. And it is a nightmarish, ugly, painful and humiliating death by degrees, as sufferers slowly but inevitably suffocate.

It destroys the lives of good and innocent people as well as their families.

The James Hardie Board was found responsible for knowingly pushing a product that is toxic to human health that has resulted in tens of thousands of deaths with many more to follow, just in Australia. They were also convicted of deceiving the stock exchange. For their crimes they were sacked and banished from holding company Board positions in Australia for between five and 15 years (they're all eligible now to regain these lofty positions).

The CEO at the time Peter McDonald was also fined $350,000. That same year he was given a $9million payout by JH for his outstanding service to the company.

C'ty sill paying

Communities accross
Australia continue to pay the cost of JH crimes through the rehabilitation of buildings affected by asbestos all over the country. Every job of removing asbestos is incredibly expensive and then once removed where do you put this deadly material?

Our Mullumbimby Hospital was a great public asset, managed and loved by its community. It was raffled and lamington driven into existence in the late 1960s.

At 50 years of age it was ready to mature from a place that made this town safe, where my children were born, into a public asset for the homeless or other disadvantaged groups and public causes. But our hospital was diagnosed with having friable asbestos in its construction. Now millions of dollars of our common wealth (our community's money – not James Hardie's) is being spent rehabilitating the site.

This exercise is being repeated a million times over on other buildings of importance – like your family home if it was built before the mid-1980s and it will be your family's wealth that will be required to pay for it.

Where is our compensation for the loss of this asset and all that follows JH?

More importantly, where is the real justice for the human victims past, present and future as a result of your decision to knowingly contaminate and sentence to death tens-of-thousands of Australians just to make a profit?

And what of James Hardie: you can find its head office in Dublin Ireland and it is valued at $1.5Billion.

Farewell Mullum Hospital and thank you to all of those who served the community through it.

HEALTH & HEALING

Long-term relief for headache and migraine sufferers

A new treatment technique can provide permanent and sustained relief from headache and migraine pain.

Active grandmother, painter and musician, Frances Baxter has regained her life after seeking treatment at the Bangalow Headache Clinic after the sudden onset of debilitating

'My life came to a standstill from my constant headache; I was totally incapacitated, vomiting 24 hours a day. All the MRIs, CAT scans and other medical tests revealed nothing,'

Using the Watson Headache Approach®, the Bangalow Headache Clinic assesses and detects a rarely diagnosed fault in the top of the spine which can be the cause of up to 80% of headache and migraine disorders.

'We expect to see significant change to a client's headache and migraine symptoms within four to five treatments. If not, we will cease treatment,' Bangalow Headache Clinic Director, Michael Hayward said.

'I'm so grateful. I needed only nine treatments to see this remarkable change,' Frances said.

Mr Hayward said: 'The Bangalow Headache Clinic offers effective and sustainable, natural, safe, drug-free and manipulation-free headache and migraine treatment. We aim for self-management - not endless ongoing treatments.'

For more information contact Michael Hayward on 0475 75 75 10 or visit: www.bangalowheadacheclinic.com.au

Autumn eating guide

Autumn is a great time for lovers of fresh locally grown food. The end of those long, hot humid days brings a big sigh of relief from our local farmers and an abundance of new seasonal fruit and vegetables to feast on!

Think creamy and nutrient-packed avocados, citrus loaded with vitamin C, broccoli brimming with goodness, plus pumpkins, corn, figs, eggplants and a whole lot more!

You can get all this direct from your local farmers at Byron Farmers Market every Thursday morning. Along with newseason just-picked fruit and vegetables, the farmers market also offers a great range of artisan bread and cheese, pasture-raised meats and eggs, fermented food and drinks as well as honey, nuts, pasta and rice. All from our local farmers.

Byron Farmers Market is held every Thursday from 8-11am in Butler Street Reserve and every Saturday from 8-11am behind the Bangalow Pub.

Preventing moisture and mould

In our sub-tropical environment there can be heavy rainfall, coupled with warm conditions and strong vegetation growth, all of which can lead to unwanted moisture retention around a home and therefore possible mould issues.

Rhys Brenton from Conscious Environments is experienced in dealing with moisture problems and says that preventive measures go a long way to ensuring you have a healthy house. 'Simple measures such as making sure surface and sub-surface water drains away from the building envelope, allowing adequate air flow and natural ventilation around a building go a long way toward minimising mould problems,'

If you lose the battle though, Conscious Environments are your go- to experts. They'll make your home healthy again.

Award-winning fare!

The Byron region is well known as a super-food bowl so it's not surprising that some of our local producers are gaining accolades and recognition from around the country.

Several stallholders at Byron Farmers Market have recently taken out top awards for their homegrown and home-made fare, including Cheeses Loves You and Nimbin Valley Dairy who were named state winners in the dairy category for the 2018 Delicious Produce Awards.

The Bay Smokehouse also won gold for their Smoked Fish Rillettes, while Nimbin Valley Pecans and Rice took out bronze for their Pecan Spread at the Sydney Royal Fine Food Show.

Rancho Relaxo's Lime and Mandarin Cordials have both won a number of awards over the years ranging from bronze to gold at the Royal Sydney and Hobart Fine Food Shows.

Rainforest Foods was awarded bronze for their Davidson's Plum Jam at the Sydney Royal Fine Food Show, and Wattle Tree Creek's Wild Lime, Orange & Whisky Marmalade took out a gold medal at the Hobart Fine Food Awards.

So shop local and buy the roduce that not only tastes freshest award-winning produce that not only tastes great but is also high in nutrients at Byron Farmers Market, every week.

Byron Farmers Market is held every Thursday from 8-11am in Butler Street Reserve and every Saturday from 8-11am behind the Bangalow Pub.

Living Decolonisation in Mullumbimby

Eve Jeffery

olonisation is a process by which a central system of power dominates the surrounding land and its components, in particular settler colonies. For example, the British settled in Australia, colonising the lans and the people who were here.

As local Arakwal-Bumberbin woman Delta Kay puts it, 'Colonisation is an insidious disease of the mind that allows for the endless justification and indiscriminate theft and extraction of anything of value from indigenous cultures in the capitalist economic world, in which we all live.'

Decolonisation is a word creeping into our vocabulary, and as uncomfortable as it might feel, we all need to find out a bit about it.

Raising awareness

A series of conversations called Living Decolonisation, will be held at the Mullumbimby Civic Hall next week to explore the idea.

The event is being held to help raise awareness about the impact of colonisation on the unconscious mindset that affects everyone in this country. One that has very real and sometimes life threatening implications for many First Nations people.

'We all swim in the murky waters of unconscious bias and systemic whiteness with its trappings of entitlement and privilege,' says event organiser Megan Edwards.

'These waters have silenced and masked First

The mysterious appearance of Aboriginal flags on the Brunswick bridge was a welcome sight on Australia Day. Photo Michelle Begg Nation's people's experience, history and message about decolonisation. They have also hardened non-Indigenous hearts to the reality of First Nations people.'

Cross-cultural conversations

A panel of Indigenous and non-Indigenous educators who specialise in the field of decolonisation will enter into a conversation with each other, and then the audience, around the following themes:

How do we decolonise our political and social systems, our bodies, minds and hearts and our relationships with the 'other'? How do we reimagine an Australia where the hurts of colonisation are addressed with the respect, honouring and humility that is called for?

Educators leading the conversation include Indigenous speakers Amber Seccombe-Flanders, Marcelle Townsend-Cross and Ella Bancroft, and non-Indigenous speakers Daniel Foor and Soenke Biermann. All speakers live on Bundjalung country except Daniel Foor, from North America, who has been warmly welcomed by local Indigenous leaders.

Leading the process

First Nations people have been leading the field of decolonisation for many years. Marcelle Townsend-Cross who helped give the inaugural talk for this year at the Ngara Institute's Politics in the Pub, is one of the speakers at the event.

Marcelle says that the call from First Nations People in Australia to decolonise has been loud, clear and consistent in recent times.

'This call asks us to decolonise our social, political, economic and knowledge systems and it asks us to decolonise our very selves,' she says.

This 'Living Decolonisation' event is the first of a series that hopes to heed her call and help facilitate this process.

Living Decolonisation events have grown out of a year long process of undertaking monthly Deconstructing Colonisation dinners in 2018 with non-Indigenous people in Northern NSW.

'Creating "Living Decolonisation" events, where we can listen to Indigenous leaders on decolonisation and have a cross-cultural conversation about this journey, is the next step in building broader social awareness of this issue,' says Ms Edwards.

The event will be held at the Mullumbimby Civic Hall on Tuesday April 2 from Cost is by donation, with a suggestion of $10. April 2.

Loft's Long Lunch back in style

Take some time out for yourself this week to leisurely graze over 5 courses with Loft's new 'Long Lunch' option, available everyday 12-3pm. Relax, wine and dine in one of Byron's hottest new venues, perched at the top of Jonson Street overlooking town.

Soak up the warm sea breezes while you enjoy Executive Chef Martyn Ridings' special offerings showcasing some of the best produce of our region (and Australia) in a creative way that brings something different to the Byron food scene.

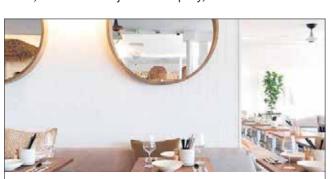

Whether you are making time to reconnect with friends, needing a mid-week excuse to leave the office or settling into a laidback weekend, the Loft Long Lunch is the perfect way to treat yourself, and have some fun!

Loft's soft, warm and beachy interiors will have you wanting to stay for hours. You can't go past one of their signature cocktails, Lychee Chilli Coconut Martini or the Brookie's Gin Gimlet. In addition to Spritz and local beers on tap, there is also a very good choice of wines, whether you are after a Grand Cru Chablis from Burgundy, or a modern organic Australian wine. Just to make it even easier to settle into the relaxed, casual vibe, there are plenty of good wines available by the glass.

While you are relaxing and enjoying the food, Executive Chef Martyn Ridings and the team are working hard behind the scenes to make sure food is spot on. A great deal of thought and care has gone into selecting the menu.

'To start, we have the 'Smoked Cod Paté'; hot smoked New Zealand cod fillets in a creamy potato paté served with crisp potato shards and finished with lemon zest and fresh dill', he says.

'The next dish is a personal favourite of mine, and something quite different for Loft. Kangaroo, cooked over hot coals served rare with textures of carrot – a smoky and sweet carrot puree, pickled carrot and roasted baby carrot. To finish, a rich red wine jus and uniquely, caramelised white chocolate is shaved on top of the carrot, which gives such a lovely sweetness and interesting contrast to the game meat and jus. The kangaroo is from the Paroo Darling Region in Northern NSW.

'To cleanse the palate, we have Tomato & Mozzarella. Two local favourites paired simply, allowing them to shine - Coopers Shoot ox-heart tomatoes with Byron Bay Mozzarella.

'We follow this with our 'Beef with Beetroot' – burnt butter sous vide, and seared Rump Cap served with textures of local beetroot. The beef is some of Australia's very best Tasmanian Cape Grim Beef. Grass fed and the highest quality cut, served rare to medium rare, with pickled plums, smoked beetroot puree, fresh beetroot sheets, cauliflower puree, and diced roasted beetroot. The textural play on beetroot with the smokiness and sweetness lends itself well to the beef.

'To finish, a refreshing mixed berry sorbet served with fresh berries. Strawberries, blackberries, blueberries and lychees combine for the ultimate summer treat.'

It appears that the Long Lunch is back in style at Loft!

Punch and Daisy

The first sign that you are in for a treat at Punch and Daisy, who specialise in coffee, breakfast and lunch, is the mouthwatering smells that greet you on arrival. The fragrance of freshly picked garden herbs and charred organic sourdough, and the aroma of brewed Moonshine Coffee, fill the air.

Dania Kamile says that the varied menu is popular with diners. 'Classic breakfast items like the Poached Eggs Salsa Verde and the Bacon and Egg Croissant continue to bring smiles and contentment', she says.

'Lunch items include the Swimmer Crab and Fish Cakes which are more deserving of reverence. The wild-caught crabs and locally line-caught fish are mixed together with Japanese breadcrumbs, and customers tell me the added excitement of a crispy start and smooth finish keep them coming back for more.

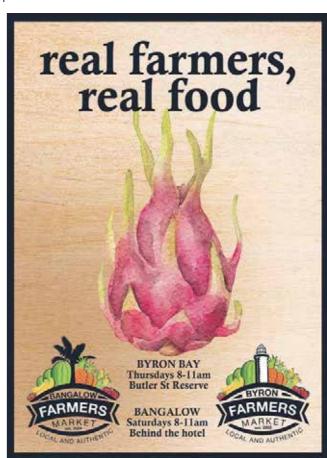

'For something on the lighter side, our vegan king oyster mushroom tacos have proven by their popularity amongst our diners that a meal without meat is just as deliciously satisfying.

'Inspired by the culture and spirit of Mullumbimby and the Northern Rivers, we are continuously evolving in the way we cook, create, and connect with our community, customers and of course our farmers, who are the ones who dictate the quality of the food', she says.

If you can't get yourself in for breakfast or lunch, they are now open on Monday nights from 5 till 8 pm, which is a gentle way to ease into the week. They are fully licensed, and will be pouring craft beers and locally made wine by Jared Dixon. The Monday night POP UP menu will change, so keep an eye and ear out for what is to come. 'Whether you make it in for breakfast, lunch or dinner, we hope to see you in soon', says Dania.

The Good Life

The Farm: Easter Eggs

By S Haslam

The Farm really do have some good ideas and once again they will be hosting their famed (free) Easter Egg Hunt. The Easter Bunny will be hiding eggs in the Macadamia Orchard at The Farm on Easter Sunday, and at 10am the Hunt begins. Everyone is welcome!

The Farm children's holiday program runs from April 8-26 and consists of a number of workshops that, whilst being fun, support The Farm's objectives, which include educating children (and adults!) on the value of sustainable organic food growing practices, coupled with an intention to create and connect to community.

During research, after purchasing The Farm, current owners Tom and Emma Lane discovered surprising parallels between the share-farming use of the land in the 1860s, by its then-owner William Flick, and its current arrangement of the 'growers collective' where the farmers own their own

The success of local people in collaborating to create and market unique local value-added produce (much of it sold to visitors) must hearten people like the Lanes who hope to inspire younger people to make a farm something more than a broadscale corporate food factory. Take your kids! See more at thefarmbyronbay.com.au.

Wild Harvest Chef Series: Jerry Mai

Wednesday 3 April 2019 $95 for 5-courses + $50 for matched wine

Jerry Mai, owner-chef behind Melbourne's Pho Nom and Annam restaurants will be joining Head Chef Alastair Waddell and wild food researcher Peter Hardwick for a one-off dinner using Australia's underutilised native ingredients. Chef Jerry Mai throws back to her restaurant roots under chefs like David Thompson, and pulls on her personal history as a Vietnamese-born Australian with her personality packed cooking: taking flavour cues from Vietnam, Thailand and Cambodia.

Nimbin comes of age!

Realestate.com.au figures show the median house price in Nimbin was $535,000 in 2018 – up from $282,000 in 2015. Nimbin Hills Real Estate agent, Yvonne Campbell said people coming to the area are attracted by clean air and water, a great community, and the affordability of the area in comparison to other areas.

Steeped in Australia's logging and dairying history, and with a strong indigenous heritage, today Nimbin is Australia's most famous hippie destination and alternative lifestyle capital.

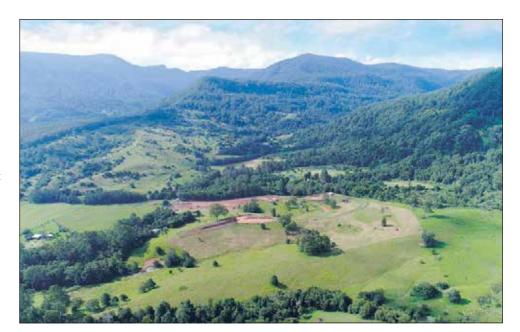

Located just 30 minutes to the regional centre of Lismore, and approximately one hour to the coast. Nimbin is NSW's third most visited town, with approximately 200,000 visitors annually (source: Tourism NSW) and a permanent population of approximately 1400 (source: ABS).

Of late, Nimbin has enjoyed something of a surge in favour as city slickers from north, south, and west flock to this tiny village for a change of pace. 'Coasties' too, jaded by the fast growth of beachside towns are also starting to see the benefits. With a thriving and eclectic main street, where a vacant shop is a rarity, balanced by the weekly farmers market selling local produce, regular entertainment and a host of amenities on offer, including a hospital and great schools; Nimbin would be one of the best serviced villages anywhere.

'Historically Nimbin has bucked the trend of so many country villages which have slowly faded away as its residents age and the young leave for the city. And Nimbin's popularity doesn't show any signs of abating. One of its greatest drawcards is the stunning natural beauty of the surrounds. Nimbin is blessed with beautiful rainforests, pristine creeks and breathtaking mountain vistas,' says Yvonne.

While classic former dairy farms in the hills around Nimbin are now pushing the one million dollar mark and beyond, and Nimbin village homes are selling for around $500,000, prices have jumped markedly in recent times.

Yvonne says 'This makes the latest land offering, "Nightcap Vista" compelling. It's north-facing and frost-free, and the rich-soil land offers a range of block sizes perfect for a sustainable lifestyle starting from just $220,000. The lots range from two-thirds of an acre to 9 acres. Six lots have already sold. The 23 lot estate offers underground power and phone services to all blocks, and a choice between town water (Stage 1) or tank water (Stage 2).'

SHE WAS BORN TO DO THIS

SOME MUSICIANS FIX YOU TO THE FLOOR, GIVE YOU GOOSEBUMPS, AND TOUCH THAT PLACE THAT SAYS 'YOU ARE PART OF THIS, COME WITH ME'. AINE TYRRELL IS ONE SUCH MUSICIAN. AFTER 18 MONTHS IN THE MAKING, ÁINE RELEASES RETURN TO THE SEA.

Your sound has changed in this album into something that is much rockier, much more of a call to arms... what brought about that change in your song writing and in your playing?

I would call it a progression more than a change, a becoming of more of myself as a songwriter and performer. Trusting my power to relay these songs in the way they were asking of me and trusting in the creative partnership with my producer, Mark Stanley.

Do you believe politically motivated songs motivate people to change?

Hell yes. They always have been used for that and they personally inspired change in me. So I am a believer. Folk music is music of the people and in its pure form the genre has to speak of the people and all that we are collectively going through as humans in this time, space

How do you want people to feel when they hear your music? Do you have a story you want them to take home?

From its very conception, we designed this album to make listeners personally and collectively, as humans, want to reach for more. From the lyrics, to the outros, to the choices in instrumentation we always came back to the mandate of reaching because we are living in exciting times where change is happening by the day and the people do have the power. Sometimes we just need to be reminded of that.

Tell me about writing Born to Do This... it's such a stirring song that brings people mainly women - to their feet!

Born To Do This is a song that gives us all permission to take up space in this world and be who we are. It's also a song that gives us permission to be angry at the things that stop us from achieving our potentials. The song was written to be inclusive of all genders, as we aren't getting out of this without each other. It particularly resonates with women, I think, because it was my own raw response to being a woman these past few years and being part of campaigns and witnessing sisters all over the world fire up. The song is my roar and it turns out a whole lotta people like roaring with me.

How has your integral relationship with musician and producer Mark Stanley helped in growing and evolving your sound? How important is it to have someone like this in a musician's ear?

Is he really intuitive? Does he ever suggest things that you never thought of, but were perfect?

Collaboration is such an exciting part of the creative process and it drove both Mark and I to dig deeper and push each other completely out of our comfort zones on this album and we hit some magical places. As David Bowie said "Go a little bit out of your depth. When you don't feel that your feet are quite touching the bottom, you're just about in the right place to do something exciting."

You are an International Finalist in a very prestigious music comp! One of the judges is Tom Waits! Who else is in the category with you? Tell us a little more?

I've been waiting for this launch in Mullum. There is a certain magic that I know Mullum will bring that I wouldn't want to miss. Emily Lubitz and the Bunyarra Culture Collective are so inspiring and deadly and I feel so damn lucky to have them sharing their particular magic in the same hall as me. My band are a bunch of dead-set legends and we only have 2 band shows left on the tour, so this one is gonna rock. We have some surprises, a children's entertainer Shorty Brown, and catering. Why would you miss it?

I STAND CORRECTED

I have been a comedian for over 30 years. Long enough to be able to tell you that political correctness is NOT destroying comedy. It's made it better. I get tired of reading articles that feature old blokes who can't tell their racist, sexist jokes anymore complaining that the world is too politically correct for their genius.

The reason people don't laugh at 'politically incorrect' jokes, isn't because the world has gone mad, it's because those jokes aren't funny anymore. They weren't actually funny in the first place. They were mean. If you haven't been the target of that sort of material, which many of the tellers haven't, they don't know what it feels like to be on the other side.

I have sat, side-of-stage waiting to go on while men have told jokes about fucking their girlfriend in the arse, or how ugly and fat some chick was that they picked up in a bar. I have heard jokes about poofta bashing. And I've heard a lot of shit jokes about Asian drivers.

I was performing at the Comedy Store in Sydney many years ago when a comic who I won't name, did some horrendous gag about how great it is when Asian drivers are killed. The audience thought it was hysterical. The comic was a complete moron. Later that night when I was in the carpark I spied him walking towards his car and I thought wouldn't it be ironic if I accidentally ran him over? If I was Asian I would have probably done it, not because of any racial profile, because in comedy terms, that would have been a pretty neat call back.

When you stand in front of people with a microphone you have a responsibility, not just how you make them laugh, but how you make them think. I don't like the term political correctness. This is a term coined by the alt-right to diminish the right that marginalised groups have to not be ridiculed and patronised for the amusement of dominant culture: those who believe they have claim on that territory called 'normal' or 'universal'. They define difference as anyone who is not them. Meaning generally, anyone not a white, straight, Anglo man. Anyone who is not 'them' is a target for ridicule. And if you don't find it funny, then apparently you don't have a sense of humour.

Politically correct is a loaded term. It carries inherent negativity. When people say 'politically correct' the words are infused with a judgement which dictates that not bullying people different to us, is somehow a blow to our basic freedoms. When people talk about political correctness they talk about it as if it's a bad thing. Like it's ruined the party. IT hasn't. But it has ruined a good old fashioned comic lynching. It has taken away our basic freedoms to oppress, humiliate and re-inforce ideas or beliefs that reduce another person or group to a stereotype so we can laugh at how stupid, or useless or ugly or fat or dumb they are. I mean when you're feeling a bit low, how fun is it to find other groups of people to feel better than! It's exhilarating. Particularly if you yourself are particularly useless and dumb to start with.

I would like to re-brand 'politically correct' to 'respectful' or 'educated and aware' or maybe just 'clever'. Yep, clever. When you're not punching down, you have to punch up, which means you can't kick the clappers out of cliched targets. You can't line up some minority group and let rip, you have to find a way to find the funny in other ways. Most of the comics I know seem to have no problem creating material that is funny and interesting and isn't offensive. It's still edgy. It's still pushing boundaries. In my opinion, it's more powerful than it's ever been. And I've seen a LOT of comedy. It can still be outrageous. It just has to BELONG to you. No one does better comedy about being Indigenous than an Indigenous comic. Same goes for gay comics. And Women. And Muslims. Et Al. It has made it a challenging time for straight white male comics because they've had to get really really good - or go home.

What's the point of oppressing people if the people you've oppressed end up with all the good jokes? Here's an idea, support a matriarchy, and we'll oppress you for a few generations - then creative freedom is yours! But, I should warn you, you will be paid less, and they'll only ever book one bloke per show because you can't have 'too many' blokes on the bill - that would be bad for business.

SOUL'D ON THE NEW ALBUM!

This Sunday afternoon Soul'd launch their new album at The Beach Hotel in Byron. Soul'd is the biggest band in the area with a 5 piece horn section, rhythm section and male and female vocals. They have been playing at venues all along the eastern seaboard of Australia for the last 14 years. One of their earliest gigs was at the Beach Hotel so it's a fitting place to launch their unique new album. Why is it unique? Well it's a USB with an 8 gig memory that contains 30 live MP3s and 18 live MP4s shot at the Beach Hotel late last year. It can be played in your car, or on your home sound system, and the video can be played through your computer or smart TV. For further info www.soul-band.com

THE FERAMONES BY THE SEA

Dubbed as the Northern Rivers' very own 'supergroup' The Feramones feature a bunch of internationally acclaimed musos such as Rick Fenn, the lead guitarist for 10CC. Also on guitar is Alan Limbrick, who recently toured the world with Mike Oldfield, and has recorded with Joan Armatrading and David Knoffler. On keyboards is Alan Park, Cliff Richard's musical director and pianist for more than two decades. Bass player Greg Lyon has a catalogue of recording credits dating back to his fusion band Crossfire in the 70s. Lead vocalist Col Germano is best known as the singer/songwriter for 80s/90s hard rock band Bourbon Street. Dubbed the 'Charlie Watts of Australia', Rick Lloyd is one of this country's most talented and highly-regarded drummers. That's a band full of rock pedigrees.

Catch them at the Ballina RSL on Saturday from 9pm and the Byron Services Club on Sunday at 4.3opm. Both shows free.

PIANO IN THE DEEP

A composer and piano virtuoso of a rare nature – Nuwanda brings this warm and brilliant show to the Byron Theatre for it fourth run.

It's easy to see why he is compared to composers like Michael Nyman and Phillip Glass, yet Nuwanda is stand-out in his genre. He has a gift for improvisation, and an almost mysterious connection to the piano; creating intimacy with the listener and evoking a tangible quality of sound when he plays – something truly unique, and simply melty.

Nuwanda is on at the Byron Theatre, on Sat 7pm. Tickets are $15 - $35. www.byroncentre.com.au

SUFI'S UP

The Tahir Faridi Sufi Qawwali Ensemble create a rich landscape of soul-stirring sounds by weaving a tapestry of male voices together in deep chorus with entrancing tabla rhythms. The poetry of Sufi mystics is sung with lively improvisation and intricate musical embellishment. Sufism uses poetry and song to unite people in the spirit of peace & devotion. The ensemble have performed in diverse venues & festivals around Australia & NZ. Byron Theatre on Friday at 7.30pm.

This is her first Bluesfest, and she's keen, in fact its going to be a tick on her bucket list.

'I heard Iggy Pop's going to be there. I've been looking at the Byron Bay festival like every year since I was probably a kid, going, "Man, if I could only ever play there, that looks like so much fun," because the line-up is always stacked and creative. It's always a surprise who's going to be there, so I'm really thrilled that I get the opportunity to come out and play for y'all.'

It was a drum kit that set Samantha on her musical path. When she was 13 she picked up some sticks and was off. 'I thought it looked cool but dad played guitar and all of his friends played guitar and my uncles played guitar, so that was kind of like a precursor to that. So when I picked up the guitar I was about 15, and started playing, and it kind of went hand-in-hand. I started writing at about 18, 19-years-old.

Samantha credits her shyness in being key to what attracted her to the limelight.

'I wanted to be an entertainer. And so I just kept working at it, and when I was 19-years-old I decided I wanted to do this full-time. I put a band together. I started booking my own shows around Kansas City, and then it moved out a little bit further regionally. I started going to Chicago and stuff like that. Then I got picked up by a record label called Ruf Records and I did a project called 'Girls with Guitars', and it kind of took off from there. I made five solo albums with them, and the rest is history.'

For Samantha, songwriting is a very organic process.

'I wish I could say there was a method to it, because that would be a little easier to control. Sometimes you'll just be driving and a melody pops in your head and you've got to stop and record it, or a little lyric comes and you've got to write it down. Sometimes you're not in the best spot to sit down and write a song, but it just comes anyway and you've got to just get it done

GS OF FISH

But for me, songwriting, it's really... if you're going to do it and be good at it, it's a 24 hour thing. It's a commitment. You don't just one day say, "All right, I'm going to start writing for my record." I really think you've got to keep writing all the time to keep that muscle up. It's just like a muscle memory thing, you know? When you stop doing it for a while, the inspiration stops flowing so easily, and it can get kind of frustrating. I feel like I've put myself into writer's block before because I've not been as disciplined about doing it.'

The secret for Ms Fish is re-invention. Every record, she believes is an opportunity to transform, even just a little!

'You get to reimagine the band and just what kind of presentation you're going to put on for your fans.

want to give them something different every time they come. I want them to be on this trip with us, and so yeah, I push myself to kind of stretch out, and really, it's just what I've been listening to for the last couple years. That's where it starts, you know? That's where my inspiration comes from; what have I been going through, what have I been doing? And then the music sort of just shapes itself around my life.'

Bangalow comedy lovers are in for a treat when Mandy Nolan presents a stand up comedy double header with two stellar performers Jenny Wynter and Jonathan Atherton. Jenny Wynter is vibrant, disarming, charming and enigmatic. Armed with her keyboard, Jenny uses the improvisation skills she's honed by working in Second City with Gary Austin and with the world renowned improvisation theatre company Loose Moose in Canada to create unique comedy songs made on the spot for her audience! Globe trotting Jonathan Atherton is a lover of culture, and pretty well kicked off comedy in Malaysia, where for 10 years he ran the Crack Up Comedy Club. With a keen ability to pick up languages and put himself in the middle of cultural conversations, Atherton is never a fly on the wall, he flies around the room.

Mandy Nolan joins these two headline comedians as the host at Pop Up Comedy at the Bangalow Bowling Club on Thursday 4 April at 8pm. Doors open from 7pm – Tix are $25 available at the club or on mandynolan.com.au

VIRGIN FOOLS!

'How do you teach someone to be funny?'That is the question Mandy Nolan is most asked about the stand up comedy course she runs through Byron Community College.

'I don't' she says, 98% of people are naturally funny or have some sort of comedic insight – I teach them technique, I help them find the things they want to talk about, and guide them in how they might talk about it. We create a 5 minute routine, and then they get up on stage!' Over the last two decades Mandy has taught more than 1500 people. The 6 week course in stand up comedy leads participants to a final end date: The Virgin Sacrifice!

HE'S RANDY. THE COUNTRY'S PREMIER NON-HUMAN STAND UP COMEDIAN. AND HE'S COMING TO BRUNSWICK PICTURE HOUSE

I never thought I would become a comedian. I wasn't, until 2004 – I did it as a dare at a pub at an open mic and I've kept doing it – it's the thing that gets me out of bed.

So what do we really know about Randy... what would his Tinder profile be?

Tea drinking, book reading, fresh air enthusiast who firmly believes that online dating is a perversion of genuine human connection and reinforces all of the self indulgent self obsession that comes from online communication...

I'm also not overly impressed by Scott Morrison aka Mr Embarrassment. I am not a Twitter sound bit guy. I wouldn't want to spend any time with ScoMo. I don't feel that I would be enriched by that guy. I felt like I might with Julia though. Could have had a laugh with her, since then its been a parade of stodgy white men.

And Randy's got big goggle eyes, apparently a thyroid condition, but that doesn't stop him reading.

My Fave book at the moment is Too Big to Walk – it's the new science of dinosaurs, by Brian J Ford. He's an amazing biologist, he's a fellow of Cambridge, and he's a researcher who's published shit loads of stuff. The book is about how dinosaurs were aquatic, and NOWeverything they tell us about dinosaurs is fundamentalist irrational protection of the concept of terrestrial dinosaurs so they still get their funding. Dinosaurs were aquatic. I am fascinated by that. I read a lot of books.

Randy is smart. But he's got a certain edge.

I listen to a lot of rock n roll and metal, I like heavy riffs, before the show I rock out to some Clutch, and I really like anything by Jess Cornelius - her new track is really great, anything Australian, I listen to lots of women, female singer songwriters... Julia Jacklyn is one of my go-to artists.

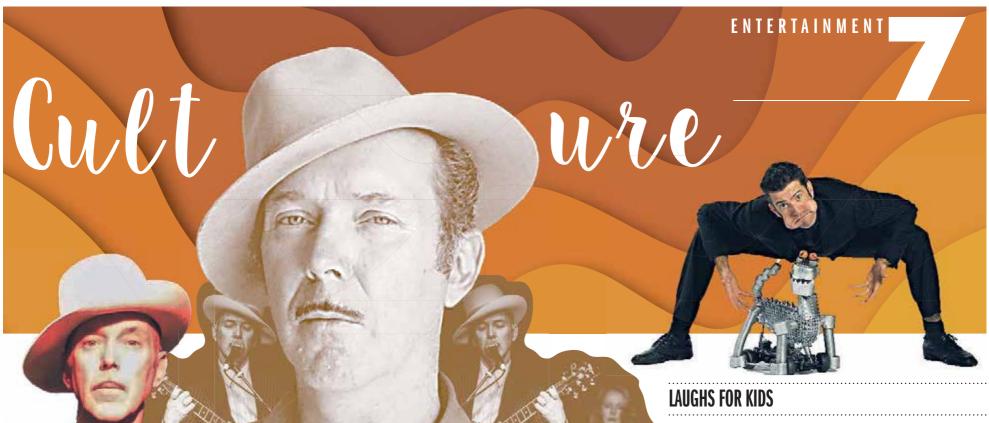

Randy gets away with a lot on stage. Somehow people drop their guard a little-it's fun to be hassled by a puppet, but he can still offend!

I have a very neutral face, people will project expressions onto my face. There is something about the neutrality of me which means they don't judge me as I appear, if my material isn't funny the novelty wears off immediately!

So what is going to happen for the Brunswick Heads show? Randy is one half of Sammy J and Randy, but this is a chance to get up in the purple fella's grill.

For a show like the one at Brunswick Heads, I am getting in the zone now, 2 weeks ahead, it's an hour show, and there's a lot I want to say. I am using bits of existing material and writing new links, its going to be awesome – I can't fucking wait!

The show is Friday and Saturday at the Brunswick Picture House at 7pm. Tix are $30/35 at brunswickpicturehouse.com

Zippa Dee Doo IT'S DAVE & CLARE!

Dave Graney emanates cool. Not because he's trying. It's because he is cool. He's refreshingly unselfconscious in the way many musicians probably wish they were. And he's funny. He gets the big joke that it's all a big joke, as evidenced by the very cool single from his new album Baby I Wish I'd Been a Better Pop Star.

Zippa Dee Doo is the 33rd album that Dave and his partner, in life and music, Clare Moore (keys, drums, vibraphone and singer!) have been involved with creating and releasing. Its eight songs are done thirteen ways, from pop gems to epic jams recorded with his band The Mistly who are basically The Coral Snakes, the band with whom Dave took out a swag of ARIA's in the 90s!

They play music drawn from a lifetime in rock'n'roll culture. They didn't learn their licks in school, they made their own mistakes and set their own standards. It's been a road of musical adventures for Graney and Clare, who started out with The Moodists back in the 8os.

'We were contemporaries of The Birthday Party and The Go Betweens and The Laughing Clowns. We spent came back and had the best year ever. I won best male artist in 1996. It was a time of 'peace' in the CD/record industry and everyone was an activist in Australian music.'

'There used to be more people in the record business. Record shops in every town. People working at record companies who would drive to shops and talk to people. By the late 90s it was stopping. There were more media. More journalists. It is a shame that the actual human side of the record industry has dropped away. Even with social media there is still nothing like word of mouth, the buzz of hearing people perform and then talking about it. All the stuff about things 'going viral' - just being in this antiseptic world of digital transmission and escaping boundaries – is not really true. Playing music has gone back to how it was in the 1950s, you have to be able to give people something they enjoy."

Although Dave prefers the dynamic of playing songs with the whole band, there's always something a bit special about gigs that are just him and Clare. 'When it's just the two of us it focuses us on not trying to match the band. We try to focus on the words and the story of the words - we play anywhere and everywhere that way. We started doing some of the parlour shows. I did one where a fella set up a PA on his back porch, and his neighbours sat around on chairs. Did one last week in a Winery inside a shearing shed in the Coonawarra. I come from around there and I felt the closest to that place than any others I've played.'

So with 33 albums and hundreds, possibly thousands of songs, how does Dave remember one song from

'I can access lots of songs, it's like being any kind of writer, there is a part of you that never changes and that's all part of my inner flux. There are a few songs that people always ask us to play, we are happy to build a set around what people are familiar

It's not just the music that's cool. It's Dave's threads. He's always had the knack of some pretty smooth styling.

'When I was younger there was nothing off the peg you could buy, you had to search for vintage stuff, because rock music used to be years ahead of fashion, and then fashion started to dress like rock musicians - no one would have dreamed of that! I never throw anything out. A lot of these pieces are synthetic so they'll be around for generations." Catch Dave Graney and Clare Moore on Sunday at the Brunswick Picture House at 4pm, tix are $27/32

Cinema Reviews

SWIMMING WITH MEN

The potential for this movie to drown in silliness was frightening. The idea that eight blokes, all of whom are a bit long in the tooth and not buffed like Adonis, would be involved in synchronised swimming might not make you want to rush to the cinema, but like the Jamaican bobsledders, they pull it off and manage to elate you at the end. In 2003, a bunch of Swedes (they appear in the final scene) formed a synchronised swimming group to 'escape the meaninglessness of life'. They won the sport's first unofficial world championship and inspired the Londoners of Oliver Parker's joyful film. The central character, Eric (Rob Brydon), is not immediately likeable. He is bored in his high-end accountancy job and resentful of his wife's election to local council. Wrongly believing that she is having an affair, he acts like a dickhead and moves into a rented room. At the local pool where he swims regularly – remember how at the beginning of 'The Graduate', Dustin Hoffman's Ben escaped his stultifying environment by lying at the bottom of the family pool? - he meets up with the synchronisers who take him in as one of theirs. The underwater photography is fantastic, with all of the actors rather than doubles executing most of the moves. Despite being the protagonist, Eric never manages to earn your total sympathy, but among his mates there is somebody we can all identify with. The will-he or won't-he? romance between one of the swimmers and their trainer is a subtle hook, as is the fear of failure that consumes another. You know where the story is headed, but sometimes you desperately crave that happy, cheesy ending. With darkness descending all around us, it is fortifying to be reminded of how people can connect and help each other through their travails. In the film's light-hearted profundity and gloriously unembarrassed conclusion, there is enough to make you keen to get out of bed in the morning and take on whatever comes along.

FIGHTING WITH MY FAMILY

Women's professional sports have come along in leaps and bounds recently and this rambunctious, uplifting and tender movie tells the story of one of the trailblazers. From Norwich, where she grew up in a family of wrestlers, Saraya Knight (Florence Pugh) crossed the Atlantic, changed her name to Paige and became the youngest ever WWE Divas Champion. The status of wrestling as a serious sport is often scoffed at, and Hutch (Vince Vaughn), her demanding American coach, concedes that its contests are 'fictitious, not fake', as much showbiz as anything else. But it is a career that Saraya and her bother Zac (Jack Lowden) have pursued with a passion all their lives. For both of the youngsters, their goal has long been to make it into the big arenas of the US and they are thrilled when they get further grooming and assessment. Zac is gutted and the borne by his reaction to not being selected, as well as Saraya's struggle to cope with her new, hard-nosed environment. Families can be torn apart by such traumas, but the parents, Ricky and Julia (Nick Frost, Lena Headey), remain rock-solid and supportive of their kids. I laughed out loud a couple of times negotiating a payment for one of his troupe, Ricky asks Union Jack how he'd feel about having a garbage bin lid smashed in his face. Then he does it, and the wrestler nods, 'it'll be okay' - and was equally touched when friends and family crowded into the Norwich living room to watch Paige take her shot at the title. In a wonderful as you ride the highs and lows with them. Rejection is the pits, but accepting it and moving on can be as demanding as any challenge in the ring. Paige's success would be hollow without her brother's embrace, and in the end love triumphs.

↑ ARIES: You're highly disinclined towards anything your heart's not into this week, so don't overpromise or over-estimate your capacity to deliver. Choose substance over sizzle. Be a team player, but watch your back. If unexpected, uncomfortable news surfaces, check facts

- ∀ TAURUS: My my my, how tongues do fly... This week's sun is in straightforward Aries, while your prima planet Venus swims into sensitive, emotionally labile Pisces. Energetic mismatch? Pretty much, but working with the old truism 'forewarned is forearmed' makes it easier not to take things personally.
- II GEMINI: Tensions dissipate as Mercury swims out of retrograde in Pisces. If you've been see-sawing back and forth about something, Venus moving into your house of mutual values highlights what makes things last, and what just doesn't cut it. There are plenty of treasure in this week's sea of possibilities, so go fish.
- Pisces can often bring a Cancerian love phase or friend connection to a close, in which case - or in any similar scenario -Cancerian author Devika Fernando's observation applies: 'We are not given a good life or a bad life. We are given a life. It's up to us to make it good or bad.'
- શ LEO: With Venus upping your need for affection and urge to merge, tops on this week's agenda is attending to the greatest love of all. Increase selfcare, treat yourself the way you'd want a lover to, and presto! Suddenly there's plenty of what you want available. But is it what you need?
- ₩ VIRGO: With Mercury out of retrograde, crossed wires unkink, missed messages magically appear, misunderstandings unravel, strangeness is explained and things that haven't been making sense suddenly give up their secrets. And as this week's fast moving transit revs from slow to go, it's time to enjoy a little waltz on the wild side.

WILL ELUSIVE MERCURY AND VENUS IN PISCES OBLIGE? YOU BE THE JUDGE... △ LIBRA: This week's likely to flush out citizens desperately in need of a crash course in Basic Diplomacy, and who better than you to deliver it? That sorted, read the advice for Leo. Current moon movements through the signs of upmarket

entrepreneurs, eccentric

rebels and slippery mystics

provide a variety of interest-

THIS WEEK'S ARIES SUN LIKES THINGS CLEAR

ing dance moves. m. SCORPIO: The cosmic temperature's hot in this week's pot and definitely set to add pep to your step, a lilt to your kilt, a dash of chili to your intimate cooking, and possibly a bomb where you least expect it. Think you already have a reasonably decent grasp on mindfulness? Ok, how about kindfulness?

- → SAGITTARIUS: Are tricky Mercury in Pisces vibes giving you the slip this week – and the pip? Totally understandable, and the cosmic good news is the antidote of Venus in Pisces, which instils more patience and compassion for those less quick on the uptake than your speedy selves. You're going to need it.
- % CAPRICORN: Mercury exiting retro this week makes it apparent what you, of course, knew all along: that feelings aren't facts, proving you right yet again. But if that feels like a Pyrrhic victory, you might want to ditch righteous for a move into the other person's shoes. Or not - your call.
- AQUARIUS: If folk seem frazzled, snappy and inclined to bite, it isn't necessarily anything you said. Then again... it does take two to tangle, so could you manage a little forgiveness work this week? Venus in the sign of the wild and willing will respond with an ocean of hoochy koochy if you do.
- ∺ PISCES: As Mercury exits retrograde in Pisces you're charming and magnetic - also elusive and tricky, which, be advised others find both entertaining and frustrating. With Venus streaming grace and favour your way, beauty principles decree this week in favour of upstyling: as in wardrobe overhaul, hair attention and personal refurbish.

Is your power meter smart?

Eve Jeffery

A new product to meter our power usage is becoming a common addition to households in Australia but some people believe 'smart meters' are unsafe. Energy Made Easy, which is part of a government information service to help us save money on our power bills, has recently introduced a new Smart Meter.

Smart meters, sometimes called interval meters, are a special type of electricity meter that are different from the analogue meters we have now, which are read at regular intervals by a human. Smart meters record how much electricity a house or business is using at regular times during a day and send the readings directly to your energy distributor electronically.

To date about 10 countries world wide are already using smart meters - Australia, Canada, parts of Italy, Japan, The Netherlands, New Zealand, some Nordic countries, Spain and parts of the UK and the US using the meter with the technology set to go in about seven more countries that are getting ready to switch.

A smart meter is automatically installed with new solar panels in Australia unless the customer requests an analogue meter instead.

Some believe that smart meters emit dangerous levels of radiation.

According to the antismart meters website, Stop Smart Meters Australia, the appliance is not safe for household use.

'If you live in NSW, QLD, SA, Tas or the ACT, don't be lulled into complacency by the opt-out provisions of the new national electricity rule starting 1 December,' says a post on their website. 'The right to opt-out and keep your existing meter only applies to "working" meters.

'If your retailer decides to do a "maintenance replacement" deployment (because sample testing has shown a likelihood of meters becoming faulty) instead of a "new meter deployment", there is no requirement for your retailer to forewarn you, other than to notify you of a power interruption.

'This means that you must convey your refusal in advance. If you have taken this step, the new rule provides for you to be given a smart meter if your meter is subject to a maintenance replacement - but it will be one that does not have its wireless communications enabled. A meter reader will continue to read your meter, and you and your family will not be bathed 24/7 in microwave radiation from your own meter.'

It looks like the rollout is well underway so the choices for consumers now are to either 'opt out' or not worry about it.

Another option is to radiation proof your home or at least your meter box.

If you would like information about refusing the Smart Meter, visit the Stop Smart Meters website: www. stopsmartmeters.com.au.

If you want to find out what the government has to say, visit: www.energymadeeasy.gov.au.

Byron second XI charge into the grandfinal with good win

Syl Reid

The Byron Bay second grade cricketers have made it into the grandfinal of the Coastal League for the second year in a row with a victory over Tintenbar East Ballina last Saturday.

Playing at TEB's home ground, Kingsford Smith South field, the Byron Cellars team lost the toss and had to bowl first.

TEB were restricted to 9/147 off their 40 allotted overs with Toby Schott topping the bowling with 3/22 off eight over's.

George Worthington (2/19) and Levi Shouldice (2/36) chipped in, while Lachlan Whiteford and Brady Fuhrmann picked up a wicket each.

chasing down the score off 35 overs.

Owen Delian was undefeated on 37 runs, batting at number three.

Toby hit 33 as an opener along with Michael Hughes who contributed 23 in their opening partnership of 61. Ryan McGuiness scored 18 runs and Peter Jackson was 12 not out as the Bay side cruised into the grandfinal this weekend versus Lennox Head probably at Rabjones Oval, Murwillumbah by all accounts.

Swimmers celebrate good season as they ready for state finals

The Mullumbimby Swimming Club had plenty to smile about as the summer season came to a close last week. Photo supplied

The Mullumbimby Swim Club celebrated its club championships last Friday to cap off another successful year in which members qualified for state titles and the north coast regional development squad.

'All swimmers have performed well this season winning medals and improving their personal best times,' club secretary Tracey Morley said.

The squad consistently won medals and improved their personal best times competing at Swimming NSW carnivals held at Murwillumbah, Alstonville, Lismore and Coffs Harbour.

Results

Club members Natasha Fraser, Jinja Jones, Rocco Jones, Finn, Mira, Ella and Pia Brittain all made it to regional school events. Natasha and Georgina qualified for the NSW Country Championships, while Natasha has qualified for the school state titles in the 400m freestyle, 400m individual medley and the medley relay team.

Ella Brittain qualified for school state titles for the 200m freestyle and 100m breaststroke.

Oliver Pickering qualified for school state championships in the 50m and 100m freestyle and 50m backstroke.

Georgina Morley-Miller was great at the North Coast Summer Championships taking six seconds off her 200m backstroke personal best time, earning the silver medal and missing the gold by 0.01 seconds. She also qualified for the north coast regional development squad.

Sara qualified for school regionals and came fifth in the 50m backstroke and qualified for the junior regional development squad.

Finn Brittian just missed out on school state finals by 0.5 of a second in the backstroke.

'The club has benefitted from having a national level coach in Craig Davidson and all swimmers and parents would like to thank him for his personalised coaching, which has brought out the best in all swimmers this year,' Tracey said.

'Well done swimmers for the excellent achievements throughout the season and good luck at the state titles. New members are welcome next September.

'Thanks to Mullumbimby community for support in our fundraising activities.'

Quality speakers line-up for Mullumbimby Giants fundraiser

The Mullumbimby Giants will be hosting their major fundraising event for the year this Friday night, which includes a line-up of A-list speakers including world champion surfer Layne Beachley and Australian league player Chris Johns.

'Chris also played for the Broncos and helped get the Melbourne Storm going, he was their first CEO,' club member Mel McKenzie said.

Other speakers on the night include former Queensland netballer and Firebirds player Katie Walker and former Australian cricket captain Jodie Fields who retired with a test average of 66.

'All up we have some pretty awesome past athletes and inspirational speakers. It will be an awesome night,' she said.

The night will also include music and auctions. All the fun this Friday March 29 at the Mullumbimby Leagues Club from 5.30pm. Tickets need to be pre-purchased at Mullum Newsagency or Stewarts Mensware.

After the party the Giants first-grade team will be looking to collect their first win for the season after losing to Casino, playing away last weekend.

In a close game played in hot conditions the Mullumbimby side lost 24-18.

The Reserves also lost 26-12, but the women's tag team won 16-0.

This weekend the Giants travel to New Park to take on the Kyogle Turkeys.

The Giants first home game at Les Donnelly Field is not until round four against the Tweed Coast on Sunday April 28.

Local surfers go head-to-head in Sydney Surf Pro

Crystal Cylinders

Lennox Head's Stu Kennedy and Byron Bay's Soli Bailey delivered on their potential with great results at the 2019 Vissla Sydney Surf Pro World Surf League Qualifying Series 6000 event at Manly Beach.

After some top level performances from both surfers they met in the round of sixteen. In a very close tussle Kennedy took the win over Bailey and moved into the quarterfinals where he was bested by eventual winner Jordan Lawler.

Kennedy struggled to find a quality wave in the 25-minute clash where very inconsistent conditions were on offer.

Stu gained 2650 points for his equal fifth result and won US $2500 while Soli gained 1550 points and US $2000 with his equal ninth placing. Kennedy is now ranked eighteenth on the QS ratings ladder with Bailey in 43rd place.

The tour

The 2019 World Surf League Championship Tour will host the biggest year in surfing ever and also bring in some major changes.

The main features are new format updates, equal prize money, and qualification for the Olympic Games Tokyo 2020.

The new format changes feature a reduction in the number of heats required to finish an event, to allow for events to run in less time to take advantage of short term swell windows.

The downside is that a competitor can be eliminated without getting to surf a one-on-one heat, and with inconsistent waves, three man heats can often be decided by the luck factor.

Red Devils run on in two weeks

Byron Bay Red Devils fans will have to wait another two weeks to watch their top side play, but the club's other teams had success when they travelled to Yamba to play the Lower Clarence Magpies last Sunday.

An under strength reserve grade had numerous U/18 players filling in and was losing early on, but managed to get an 18-18 draw.

The U/18s also had to rally back from being down a try to pull off a pretty good win finishing up 14–8.

The highlight of the day was the performance of the women's tag team who came away winners 42-0.

The Red Devils next play at home on Saturday April 6 when they host the Evans Head Bombers.

There are no NRRRL games this weekend as referees are undergoing training.

Congrats Tamara, Ben, Asren, James, Cathy and Lisa, who all led honest campaigns based on policy for the 2019 NSW election. As the results again show, Byron Shire leans heavily towards an ideology of environmental protection and responsible, equitable and transparent planning. Will the massive pre-election commitment from the Liberal Nationals party for the region be honoured, even though its candidate Ben Franklin was unsuccessful? Fulfilling those promises would be a hallmark of good government. And given this is a very active political region, those promises won't be forgotten.

Council watcher Fast Buck$ aka John Anderson had a surprising reply from staff over how the Disco Dong sculpture was approved on Ewingsdale Road. Staff say that section 4.1(1) of the EP&A Act 1979 allows development for the purposes of a road or road infrastructure facility by a public authority without consent. Staff justified the work to Anderson, 'because it serves the purpose of improving the roundabout's aesthetic quality.'

Last week's story New animal hospital on the way incorrectly stated the hospital was to be also a tourist attraction. Ninian Gemmell told Backlash, 'We do intend to offer an educational facility and viewing area so that students and small groups can observe the local wildlife being treated. Currumbin Hospital has such a facility. However we do not intend to be a tourist attraction or zoo. We will exist to treat and release injured wildlife and work with the local care groups... not to offer an attraction to the public'.

Also a correction regarding the bypass story from last week: Labor candidate Asren Pugh said he was not in favour of halting works on the bypass and supports a bypass. He said if he was elected and council wanted him to, he would have taken the option of the rail corridor to the minister. 'I did call for the bus interchange to be stopped until proper community consultation occurs'.

Council will be locking the gates on the Butler Street Reserve from 9pm to 6am daily to stop overnight parking. It's in response to recent illegal camping, partying and dumping of rubbish, including faeces. Penalties will apply if your vehicle is still parked in the Reserve after 9pm. Free parking is still available in the Reserve between the hours of 6am and 9pm daily, except on market days which include Farmers Markets on Thursdays and monthly markets – on the first Sunday of the month.

How did neighbouring electorates fair after Saturday? Lismore have elected Labor's Janelle Saffin after a close race against the Greens' Sue Higginson. Clarence re-elected Nationals MP Chris Gulaptis with a margin almost the opposite to here. Up in Tweed, incumbent Nationals MP Geoff Provest retained his seat against newcomer Craig Elliot 47.28 to 52.72 per cent on the two candidate preferred vote.
